8. The act of Congress of even date with said act (12 Stat., 793), authorizing treaties for the removal of the several tribes of Indians from the State of Kansas, and for the extinction of their title, and a subsequent act for relocating a portion of the road of the appellant (17 Stat., 5), neither recognize nor confer a right to the lands within the Osage country. (Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. United States, 93 United States Reports, p. 733.)

Mr. INGALLS. The recital on this point in the preamble to the resolution is:

The Supreme Court of the United States construed the indemnity clause found in the grant made by Congress in aid of said road, and held that under such a grant indemnity lands are allowed in lieu only of lands originally included in the grant, but which are afterward sold or disposed of by the United States between the date of the grant and the date when the granted lands became identified by the definite location of the line of the road.

This resolution was evidently drawn by some person not familiar with the facts. I do not assume that the Senator from Nebraska who offered the resolution had examined, at the time when he prepared it, the text of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; and I state affirmatively that the recital contained in this paragraph of the preamble to the resolution is not supported by the decision of the court in the case that has been named. I mention this, the Senate will understand, not for the purpose of impeding or hindering the Senator in the procurement of the information that he desires, but in order that the Senate may not be bound by improper and untruthful recitals either of law or of fact.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I presume the Senator from Kansas has read more of that case than the syllabus which has just been reported from the Secretary's desk. I presume that from his superior appreciation of the facts of this case and from his keener appreciation as to what the Supreme Court probably meant as to its decision of the facts. If there be one thing decided in the case as I have read it—and the Senate will excuse me for alluding to this, because it seems to be necessary from the statement made by the Senator from Kansas—it was that under a grant such as was made to the Lawrence, Leavenworth and Galveston Railroad, where land covered by the alternate sections had been disposed of by the Government before the passage of the grant, no claim to such land could attach on the part of the railroad company. That was the main point decided, and for proof of that I refer the Senator from Kansas to this fact: Previous to that decision the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior had held directly the other way; they had recognized the right of a railroad company to all the land within the terms of the grant, whether the Government had disposed of any of this land before the date of the act or not. I suppose the Senator from Kansas will concede it to be a fact that previous to the decision in this case the Land Department had held that a railroad company was entitled to all the land embraced within the boundaries of the grant or indemnity for any loss, whether the Government had disposed of it or not before the date of the grant. Am I right?

Mr. INGALLS. As the Senator appeals to me, I will take this occasion to say that I am not at this time engaged in any discussion as to whether the decision of the Supreme Court was right or wrong or what it was, except so far as affects the veracity of the recitals in the resolution and the propriety of the Senate binding itself by an affirmative declaration that those recitals are true. Whenever the proper time comes I shall be glad to discuss that or any other question with the Senator; but we are now considering the question whether or not the resolution shall be adopted, not in consequence of any allegations that the decision of the Supreme Court may have been this, or that, or the other, but that it was not what it is declared to have been in the preamble to the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; I understood the Senator before and I understand him now. I wish to show that there can be no question as to the facts stated in the recital. The first recital is that the Supreme Court of the United States have so decided. The Senator from Kansas says that the Supreme Court of the United States have not so decided. There is no question as to the correctness of their opinion; the only question is as to the fact whether there was any such opinion. I was not undertaking to argue either one way or the other; I was endeavoring to refresh the Senator's recollection by showing that he knew himself that the fact as stated in the preamble is correct. That is all I was seeking to do, and in endeavoring to do that I made a statement which I think the Senator from Kansas will admit to be true. I stated that before the decision in this case the Land Department had universally held and acted upon it that a railroad company was entitled to all the land embraced within the terms of the grant, whether the Government had disposed of it before or after the date of the grant; and if the Government had previously disposed of it then the railroad company was entitled to indemnity land. That was the statement I put to the Senator from Kansas as a question of fact. Is it not true that the Land Department so held previous to the decision of this case, the syllabus of which he has heard from the desk? That is a question of fact which I ask the Senator.

Mr. INGALLS. There has been nothing said about the decision of the Land Office before this time, and that is not under discussion. There is nothing whatever involved in the consideration of this resolution upon that point. The question is a very simple one; it is a very plain one; and I shall not be drawn at this time into any discussion whatever of the merits of the controversy or of the facts in the case further than to say, as I did originally, that the preamble contains a recital of matter that is not borne out by the decision to which the Senator alludes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not as to the merits of the matter; but the Senator from Kansas alleges that the allegation in the preamble is not correct. My only object is to show that the allegation is true. I wanted to confirm myself in that view by showing that the Senator's own knowledge of the history of procedure in the Land Department would sustain the truth of the allegation. I proposed to the Senator the question whether the Land Department invariably did not rule as I have said. The Senator does not deny it, and I think no Senator in this body will deny it. Then comes this decision in the case of the Lawrence, Leavenworth and Galveston Railroad Company. The question in the Senator's mind is what was that decision. I allege in the preamble, which I claim to be correct, that the Supreme Court expressly adjudicated that any land transferred before the date of the grant did not pass to the railroad company. The Senator will see the force of the query I propounded to him. So true is it, that as soon as the decision was pronounced the Land Department changed its course of procedure in conformity with the decision. I will ask my friend from Kansas if the Land Department at that time did not recognize the fact as to what that decision was, and how far it reached, when they proceeded at once to change their policy of procedure, and after that time held that the railroad company was only entitled to land within the granted limits at the date of the grant? The Land Department so ruled, they so held, until a Secretary of the Interior, Carl Schurz, for some reason began to question the force and effect of the decision. His own Department had recognized it and acted upon it, and acknowledged that the point as now claimed was decided in the case. The first question to be decided in the case was stated by Justice Davis:

It is, therefore, of primary importance to ascertain the scope and meaning of that act.

That is the substance of the decision from the beginning to the end. It is true the railroad ran through an Indian reservation, and it was claimed that therefore the rights of the railroad company did not attach; but in order to come to that conclusion the Supreme Court held, to keep the railroad company from laying their hands upon the Indian reservation, that the act itself gave them no right to the land. Hence it was that under that decision they had no right to take this land. They then had no right to take it even though it were an Indian reservation.

The Senator from Kansas is evidently conversant with the decision from beginning to end. It was not a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court. Judge Field dissented; and if my friend from Kansas has read, as no doubt he has, the reasoning of Judge Field, he knows that that judge antagonized the very doctrine which is set up in the preamble of this resolution. He sought to show that the Supreme Court were wrong in deciding what the Land Department held it had decided and what the preamble to this resolution says it had decided. Judge Field dissented, and when he dissented from that decision he very naturally expressed his grief that the railroad company should suffer to the extent of losing the land which the majority of the court said they were not entitled to. But there was the fact.

Then, after administering the law in the Land Department for two or three years, recognizing the decision as we say it was, comes Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior, and he is disturbed about this matter. His Department was administering the law as the Supreme Court said it was, and had been doing it for two or three years, and then he found it convenient as Secretary of the Interior to ask the opinion of the Attorney-General. That is the favorite way of disposing of such matters. We have the Supreme Court followed when it is convenient for the Departments to do so, and when that will not exactly meet the case, then it is convenient to have an Attorney-General to reverse the Supreme Court. That was the mode of proceeding here. Carl Schurz found that his Department had been administering the law for two or three years as the Supreme Court said it was, and then the question was referred to the Attorney-General. Carl Schurz, when he referred it to the Attorney-General, the law officer, made this remark in his opinion:

Entertaining these views of the law, the Attorney-General advised a return to the practice in vogue before the promulgation of the Supreme Court decisions in the cases of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States (2 Otto, 733) and United States vs. Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company (8 Otto, 334).

Which—

Carl Schurz says—

Which seem to hold that indemnity can only be taken for lands lost between the dates of the granting act and of the definite location of the road.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired, and the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that the Senator will consent to the withdrawal of the preamble, the recitals, and let the resolution pass.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is a matter between the Senator and myself. I have only a few words more to say. I am willing it shall go over until to-morrow, and then shall be willing to adopt language which will not commit the Senate to the doctrine the Supreme Court announced in that case.

Mr. CALL. I move that by unanimous consent the Senator from Nebraska be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the pending resolution proceed. Is there objection?

Mr. FRYE. I should like the Senator to give me, if he can, an idea of how much time it will occupy. I would not like to consent to lose a day in the discussion of this resolution.

Mr. CALL. I think the Senator from Nebraska ought to be allowed to conclude his remarks. It is usually allowed.

Mr. PLATT. May I not suggest to the Senator from Maine whether it is not economy of time to have this matter out now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to proceeding with the pending resolution?

Mr. FRYE. I yield to the general sentiment of the Senate, if they desire to listen to the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was suggesting that Carl Schurz very cavalierly, because he does all things in that way, suggested that this decision "seems to hold," and, though his Department had been admitting it and acknowledging it for years, he discovered for the first time that it only seemed to hold, and referred it to Attorney-General Devens, and he, speaking of this decision, alludes to it in this way:

It is understood that up to the time of the decision of the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States (2 Otto, 733), the rule of the Department had been to indemnify the railroad, not only for lands which had been sold or pre-empted after the date of the passage of the granting act, but previous thereto—

That had been the rule before the decision; after the decision it was different—and that in consequence of the remarks made in that case the rule has been changed.

That is a very pleasant way for an Attorney-General to speak of a decision of the Supreme Court—"the remarks made in that case." Nobody but an Attorney-General coming from the State of Massachusetts perhaps would have dared to say a thing of that kind. A decision of the Supreme Court of the United States laying down the law for this Government he speaks of as "the remarks made in that case!" The present Attorney-General from Pennsylvania might be willing to wrestle with the propositions in the same way, as may be indicated by his opinion in a case to which the Senator from Kansas referred the other day, known as the backbone grant.

But Carl Schurz referred this to the Attorney-General and said "it seemed to hold," and then the Attorney-General strengthened this commentary of the Secretary of the Interior by alluding to it as "the remarks of the Supreme Court" made in that case.

There we stand, and the fact now I think will be conceded by the Senator from Kansas that previous to this decision the Land Department invariably held that the railroad company was entitled to all the land covered by the lines of the grant whether the Government had disposed of it before the date of the grant or not. That is concurrent testimony as to what the Supreme Court said and as to what the Supreme Court meant in that decision. The preamble says that the Supreme Court did so decide. I have read that opinion of the Supreme Court. Here is the letter of Carl Schurz and here is the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, and upon that Schurz directed that his Department, notwithstanding the decision in this case had for years been recognized, overruled it and went back and adopted the system upon which they had acted years before. This resolution could not be presented in any other way except to state the facts as they were then. It says:

Whereas on the 5th day of June, 1880, Attorney-General Devens, to whom the question had been referred by Hon. Carl Schurz, then Secretary of the Interior, rendered an opinion, &c.

All these facts are stated as they exist, the fact that the Department had recognized and that the Department had acted upon the decision. Now at this late day when we come with a resolution asking if that opinion of Carl Schurz has been followed by the Land Department, if it has ignored the decision of the Supreme Court and continues to ignore it by giving thousands upon thousands and I know not but millions of acres of land of the public domain to railroad corporations to which they were not entitled.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has before him the decision of Mr. Justice Harlan overruling the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I allude to it in the preamble, and there he will find:

Whereas on the 5th day of June, 1880, Attorney-General Devens, to whom the question had been referred by Hon. Carl Schurz, then Secretary of the Interior, rendered an opinion, in which, referring to the language of the Supreme Court in the above-named case in regard to the indemnity authorized by grant under consideration, he stated that in the circuit court for the district of Wisconsin, in 1879—

Four years after the decision of the Supreme Court—

Justice Harlan had expressed different views from those announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, and held that under a grant similar to that involved in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States indemnity lands are allowed in lieu of lands disposed of by the United States either before or after the date of the grant.

I set that fact out in the preamble.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it is so set out, but I wanted to know if the Senator had before him the decision of Justice Harlan in which he overruled the decision of the court of which he was a member.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; I have not that. I do not know whether the gentleman means to concede that Justice Harlan had a right to overrule the Supreme Court, or whether he means by his question that Justice Harlan did not understand what the Supreme Court had decided or differed with it. Strange things are taking place as well in the Supreme Court as in the Land Department in regard to this matter of land grants. I think my friend from Iowa will concede that very strange and mysterious doings in the Supreme Court and the circuit courts and in the Land Department of this Government have taken place. I think my friend has abundant evidence in his own State that such is the fact. He knows it by the sufferings of his own people from the administration of the law of railroad grants and by the decisions of courts. He knows that in his own State some of his own people have suffered to the deprivation of their property and some of them to the deprivation of their reason because of the treatment accorded to them. It is not the time for us to stand higgling at this day at just what was the meaning of the Supreme Court when the Departments of the Government recognized its decision, which was not disturbed in that Department until Carl Schurz fortified himself by the opinion of the Attorney-General from which I have read; and now it is too late, I suggest to my friend from Iowa, if he is disposed to higgle on this question, when the Supreme Court once in 1875 made a decision apparently in the interests of the people, and when that has been done this Department gets to work to ignore it, to defy it, and then when that fact is stated which is a fact directly within our knowledge, then gentlemen seek to get beside it as the Department has done, and to make excuses for these companies getting millions of acres to which they are not entitled under this decision of the Supreme Court.

It seemed proper that I should explain why it was that this was stated as a fact which had been recognized by the Government itself for years. Still, if gentlemen are tender on that point, I will suggest this language:

Whereas it is alleged—

That will not commit the Senate. I desire the facts to be stated in the body of this preamble, that the Secretary of the Interior may know, and that the Senate may know, the very point upon which we seek information. Therefore I suggest, to meet the gentleman's views, that the preamble be modified by saying, "Whereas it is alleged."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nebraska to modify his resolution?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read as modified by the mover.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that at its December term in the year 1875 a decision——

Mr. INGALLS. That is sufficient for that; now the next whereas.

The SECRETARY. "And whereas it is alleged that on the 5th day of June, 1880," * * * "And whereas it is alleged that Secretary Schurz," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the resolution offered by him yesterday.

Mr. INGALLS. In order to relieve the Calendar that had better be indefinitely postponed, the subject having been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, the 20th day of December, 1883, they stand adjourned till 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1884.

The resolution was postponed indefinitely.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate now resumes the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules as in Committee of the Whole. The pending rule will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVI.

BILLS—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

1. All bills and joint resolutions which shall have received two readings shall first be considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, after which they shall be reported to the Senate; and any amendments made in Committee of the Whole shall again be considered by the Senate, after which further amendments may be proposed.

2. When a bill or resolution shall have been ordered to be read a third time, it shall not be in order to propose amendments, unless by unanimous consent, but it shall be in order at any time before the passage of any bill or resolution to move its commitment; and when the bill or resolution shall again be reported from the committee, it shall be placed on the Calandar, and when again considered by the Senate it shall be as in Committee of the Whole.

3. Whenever a private bill is under consideration it shall be in order to move, as a substitute for it, a resolution of the Senate referring the case to the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who is temporarily absent from the Chamber has requested me to take charge of this report in his absence. I am not so familiar as he with these modifications, but I believe that clause 3 of the new rule as reported contains the only modification suggested. That, as Senators will see, provides that when a private bill is under consideration a resolution of the Senate may be moved as a substitute, referring the case to the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883. It was believed by the committee——

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator refer to that act?

Mr. HARRISON. I have sent for it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will allow me one moment——

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The third subdivision of the rule reads as follows:

Whenever a private bill is under consideration it shall be in order to move, as a substitute for it——

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to that portion of this subdivision "as a substitute for it." Is a resolution really a substitute for a bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I should say so. Instead of contemplating action by the Senate on the bill itself, the resolution is interposed to take its place to refer the claim—not the bill, but the claim mentioned in the bill—to the Court of Claims for adjudication under the act of March 3, 1883. It seems to me, therefore, that it is appropriately described in the rule as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Indiana whether without this rule, which seems to be entirely competent, as we now stand under the practice of the Senate, we can move an amendment by way of substitute to accomplish a reference to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HARRISON. I am a little modest in answering to questions of parliamentary law or under the rules of the Senate; but I should think not. I should not think that under the general rules of the Senate it would be in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I think it has been done and in a case of some prominence, which the Senator from Wisconsin I suppose will remember—the case of Holliday, I think. There was a proposition made in the Senate, I think by my friend the former Senator from New York, Mr. Kernan, to refer that case to the Court of Claims, and that was not held to be out of order. It was an amendment by way of substitute referring the entire question to the Court of Claims, which I always thought was an eminently proper course. If that can be accomplished now I do not see the use of encumbering our rules with a provision which in substance is already there.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the experience of the Senator from Delaware is very much greater than my own here, but I certainly remember no single instance where such a motion as is authorized by this rule has ever been made in the Senate since I have been in the body. I remember quite a number of instances in which amendments to a bill or to a joint resolution referring the subject-matter of the claim to the Court of Claims or bills or resolutions for the purpose of referring claims, but I do not remember a single instance where the motion contemplated by this rule, disposing of the pending bill, has ever been resorted to, and I do not think it probable that such instances can be found, unless the case mentioned by the Senator from Delaware, of which I have no recollection, is of that precise character.

Mr. BAYARD. If I recollect that case—though I would rather take the recollection of the Senator from Wisconsin than I would my own about it—the Holliday bill, which was a private bill, was under consideration, and the then Senator from New York, Mr. Kernan, moved an amendment by way of substitute, which referred the question to the Court of Claims. I do not remember that any point of order was raised upon it, but I think there was a vote of the Senate upon it, and they declined so to refer it. I never heard a point of order raised, and I know that such a substitution was contemplated, because the bill was in print for some time, and the amendment was on the theory of a disposition of the case to which I deferred. It was apparently held to be in order; and if so, there is no necessity for this proposed rule. If it was not in order, and the Senate consider it wise to permit such a substitution, that is a different thing.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will pardon me, I have now the act for which he called, which is found on page 485 of the acts of the last session, and the first section, which is the one relating to the matter under discussion, is as follows:

That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.

That is all that is important in this connection. Now, it does seem to me that in the absence of some rule, such as is prescribed here, it would not be in order, pending the consideration of a bill, to make such a motion. The Senator from Wisconsin has suggested that there is some other rule covering the case. If so, I am not aware of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware, with the leave of the Senate, that he recollects the case the Senator refers to. That was a case where it was proposed to substitute for a bill paying a private claim a bill referring it to the Court of Claims, which was, of course, in order under the old Senate rules, and would be now, but it required at that time a bill to be concurred in by both Houses and signed by the President. The bill of last winter, which is now the law, authorizes either House by a resolution, or a committee of either House by a resolution, to make the reference without the concurrence of the other House or of the President. This rule proposes to substitute for a pending bill a mere Senate resolution, which would not be in order under the old rules.

Mr. BAYARD. I am not disposed to object to this rule or to anything else that will facilitate the removal of the trial of questions of fact, especially those relating to private claims, from the decision of the Senate, which I consider one of the most unfit bodies of any that I know of to deal with a question of suggested facts. I shall not make any objection.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the chairman of the committee if he examined section 1060 of the Revised Statutes when this rule was being considered by the committee?

Mr. FRYE. I did not.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask that the section be read by the Secretary, and if there is any difficulty in the way between this section and the law of last session, I do not see how it is to be reconciled under this rule.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 1060. All petitions and bills praying or providing for the satisfaction of private claims against the Government, founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, shall, unless otherwise ordered by resolution of the House in which they are introduced, be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, with all the accompanying documents, to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GARLAND There is little difficulty in framing this rule to meet the two laws, the act of March 3, 1883, and the section just read. The law of March 3, 1883, has all that is there substantially, and in addition allows the committees to refer claims to the Court of Claims and mentions every kind of claim, while section 1060 mentions claims founded on any law of Congress or on any contract, express or implied. The power is very large under section 1060 to do this very thing, but it does not contemplate that it shall be done by bill, but simply by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House, unless otherwise ordered by the respective Houses.

I think, to meet this whole matter, both under the law of 1883 and section 1060, you should strike out the words "as a substitute for it." Then perhaps the whole matter would be accommodated.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Arkansas will allow me to ask him whether, if this language shall be stricken out and the motion shall be to refer to the Court of Claims, it will leave the bill still pending upon our Calendar undisposed of. If, however, the motion here named is authorized by the rules as a substitute for a pending bill, it disposes of the pending bill and disposes of the claim by sending it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think so, because section 1060 of the Revised Statutes says petitions, private bills, or anything else shall be referred, and you do get rid of them just as well in that way as if you pass a resolution here to indefinitely postpone them or a resolution to refer, and that keeps up the harmony between the last law and the section I have read. That is my version of it. I am not combating the idea of the rule, but wish simply to work the two laws together by proper phraseology in this clause of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the sixteenth rule.

The rule was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I shall reserve the question on the third clause of that rule in the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I will look at the amendment which the Senator offers.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me one moment, this especial clause of this rule was drafted to avoid a certain difficulty which comes from another law and in another direction, and I desire to look at it before I can say anything in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I rise to ask the Senator from Maine who has charge of this measure to give way to me to make a motion to go into executive session. There is a very large amount of executive business which it is desired to report, and this is the last day for the transaction of business before the holiday recess; it will take nearly all the time we can reasonably devote to it. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules. The Secretary will report the pending proposed rule.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVII.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, and bills making appropriations for the expense of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements; also amendments to bills establishing post-roads, proposing new post-roads, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; also amendments proposing new items of appropriations to bills for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. It will be perceived that there are here two amendments proposed to the old rule.

Mr. BAYARD. Do the words in italics indicate the changes?

Mr. FRYE. The changes are in italics.

Mr. BAYARD. They are the only changes?

Mr. FRYE. They are the only changes; one sending the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia to the Committee on the District of Columbia; the other sending the river and harbor appropriation bill to the new Committee on Internal Improvements. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the second amendment sending the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Internal Improvements until such time as the question shall have been settled whether or not there shall be such a committee and with liberty then to return to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not allow the whole rule to be passed over for the present?

Mr. FRYE. Let me put in my request first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]?

The Chair hears none, and the order will be regarded as granted.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question? Having made provision that the appropriations for the District of Columbia shall go to the District Committee, post-route bills to the Post-Office Committee, and that such other bills as now properly go to the Committee on Commerce shall be referred to a new committee, which I understand it is his purpose to raise, let me ask why he does not go further, and send the naval appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bills to their appropriate committees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit the Chair will suggest to him that that portion of the rule, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, has just been passed over and is not now under consideration.

Mr. McPHERSON. I supposed it was only the one clause relating to internal improvements which the Senator from Maine desired to have passed over. Do I understand that the Senator from Maine asks to have the whole section passed over?

Mr. FRYE. No; only that clause touching the Committee on Internal Improvements. The Chair misunderstood me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Maine distinctly.

Mr. FRYE. My request only extended to the one amendment touching the Committee on Internal Improvements, leaving the rest of the rule to be considered now.

Mr. McPHERSON. If there is any reason why the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia should be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia and why the post-office appropriation bill should be sent to the Post-Office Committee, there is an equally good reason why the Navy and Army appropriation bills should be sent also to their appropriate committees, to be first considered there.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, there is nothing here which proposes to send the Post-Office appropriation bill to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The only changes relate to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and to the river and harbor bill, which has usually been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the Committee on Commerce is here changed to a Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. McPHERSON. I see it is the bill establishing post-routes that is to be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not hear correctly the proposed rule as it was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate agree to the first clause of the rule as reported?

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to learn from the committee their idea in proposing to send the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia to the District Committee. Why take it from the Appropriations Committee? What is the reason for that?

Mr. FRYE. I can give simply the impressions which I gathered from the discussion occurring before the Committee on Rules, feeling no special interest in the matter myself. The District itself pays one-half the expenses of managing the District affairs and taking care of the District property, and the District Committee itself is especially authorized to consider all subjects touching the interests of the District, and it seemed to the Committee on Rules that that committee for that very reason was entitled to receive the District appropriation bill for consideration. Again, the District, as it is situated now, is without a constituency; there is no one to take any special interest in its affairs, no one especially authorized to investigate its necessities except the two committees on the District of Columbia of the two Houses. When the proposition was made that it would be a proper thing, while being compelled to consider all questions touching appropriations for the District, to allow that committee to prepare the items of appropriation themselves and report them to the Senate, it was considered on the whole that it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. GARLAND. The same argument would carry the appropriations for the benefit of the Indians to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and for Territories to the Territorial Committee, and we should go on in this way until we emasculated entirely the Committee on Appropriations proper; there would be no work at all for that committee. The theory of the appropriations for the Government should be, it occurs to me, kept in unity before the one committee that has the entire subject and sees the expenditures and the demands for expenditures and the outlays all at one glance, so to speak.

If the argument is good as to the District of Columbia for the want of a proper constituency and some one to look after its business, certainly the Territories are exactly in the same condition, the Indians are in the same condition, and by this means we should cut down the Committee on Appropriations entirely. Take the appropriation bills, for example, by Departments. Take the judicial appropriations; they would go to the Judiciary Committee under that rule. Take the naval appropriations; they would go to the Naval Committee; and we should not have a thing left in the world for the Appropriations Committee to do. You might just as well put an end to it.

Mr. FRYE. My experience has not been that there is any danger of the Appropriations Committee being deprived of what legitimately belongs to it. The complaint which I have heard for the last dozen years is the danger that the Appropriations Committee will seize and get control of all the legislation of Congress. To-day, by reason of the singular rules of the House and the Senate, the Appropriations Committees can legislate generally. Under this very rule we are considering now the House proposes general legislation, almost anything under its rules and under the rulings of a Speaker or of a chairman of a Committee of the Whole. That general legislation comes over to the Senate, and under our rules no amendment to the general legislation sent here from the House is in order, and we must take the general legislation as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations or else not take it at all. The result is that there is a committee of conference made up of members of the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House, and the greater part of the legislation assumed by that committee is really legislated by a committee of conference.

I do not believe there is any danger of the Appropriations Committee being deprived of anything which legitimately belongs to it. As I said before, I have myself no special care about this particular item, although it did seem to me proper, and I voted very willingly that the District appropriation bill should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. I think there is one reason which may be assigned for referring this appropriation bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia that applies to no other appropriation bill. The people of the District of Columbia have no representatives; the moneys appropriated for the District of Columbia are not the revenues of the United States Government except to the extent of one-half. One-half of the money so appropriated is raised by taxation upon the people of the District. When the Appropriations Committee deals with general appropriations for the existence of the General Government, it deals with public revenue only. In this instance we deal with public revenue to the extent of one-half the amount appropriated, while the other half is raised by taxation on the people of the District.

The District Committees of the two Houses certainly understand, or ought to understand, very much more about District affairs than members of the two Houses not upon those committees, or than any other of the standing committees of the two Houses. The Senate District Committee knows, or ought to know, the extent to which revenues can be raised by taxation in the District; it knows, or ought to know, better than any other committee, the necessities of the District government, and the ways and means of providing for them.

For these reasons I have for years believed, as I now believe, that it is absolutely necessary and important that that appropriation bill should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think the reasons for that appropriation bill going to that committee are a thousand-fold stronger than can be assigned for sending the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Commerce. But I have no objection to that reference as it is now required by the rule, and as the new rules require it to be sent to the committee having jurisdiction of rivers and harbors.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to make a suggestion? The House of Representatives, I believe, claims the right to originate all appropriation bills. Does the House Appropriations Committee continue to consider the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. HARRIS. My answer to the Senator from Kentucky is that so far as I am informed there has yet been no change of the rule in the House that I am aware of; but however that may be, we have no jurisdiction or control of the rules of the House of Representatives. This is a matter of controlling our own action, and the question for the Senate is which one of its standing committees is the appropriate committee to consider this particular bill.

That is all that I desire to say, Mr. President.

Mr. BAYARD. It strikes me that the difficulty about this special feature of the rule arises from the misunderstanding of what are the functions of appropriation bills. Properly they are simply bills to provide funds for the execution of existing laws; they have nothing to do with the functions of legislation beyond the mere ascertainment and provision of the money necessary to carry laws then on the statute-book into effect. The moment that you depart from that theory of an appropriation bill you are launched upon a sea of general jurisdiction that can readily, improperly exercised, absorb the powers of every committee of the body. Under the reasoning of the Senator from Tennessee it seems to me that each committee could undertake to report appropriations for all subjects within the general cognizance of the committee

I think the experience of this Government and of its legislation has been that independent of the Committee on the Judiciary, independent of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any other one of the standing committees of the body, an Appropriations Committee is necessary simply to pass upon the assessments made by the Executive Departments for the proper execution of the functions of the Government and to provide money for them as they stand, and do nothing else.

With the policy of laws the Appropriations Committee have nothing to do; with reform and amendment of existing legislation the Appropriations Committee have nothing to do. They, if their functions are kept in their proper sphere, will take the estimates from the Executive Departments, and they will, under instructions and comparison and examination discover how much money is needed to carry on the Government in its different branches; and there their proper function begins and there it ought to end.

If I am right in this, and I do not think I can be mistaken, it is not well to select the Committee on the District of Columbia as the one committee out of all the forty or fifty standing committees of the body who shall have the duplicate function, first, of general legislation, and coupling with that the power and duty to report such sums as they deem necessary for its execution.

The Appropriations Committee is controlled by the reports of standing committees of this body, by their recommendations; your rule generally provides for it; they are controlled, as I said, by the estimates from the Departments and by information of that kind; but I submit to the Senate would it not be a solecism in our general administration of the powers of this body to couple the power of appropriation and the power of general legislation in the same committee? Where else in one other committee do those two features combine?

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator speaks about the difficulty of combining the power of reporting appropriations and general legislation in the same committee. I would ask him if he does not know that a very large amount of the most important legislation has been reported by appropriations committees and forced through both bodies?

Mr. BAYARD. And I am now protesting against any such practice. I consider that one of the most vicious forms of legislation has been the ingrafting upon appropriation bills of general features of law.

Mr. INGALLS. So do I.

Mr. BAYARD. It is one that this body has endeavored to prevent, and in my experience we have returned, and properly returned, bills to the House of Representatives because they contained features of general legislation. The whole function of an appropriation bill is disregarded when it is turned into an engine of general legislation instead of being confined to its proper duties.

The question is, if it be unwise, inexpedient, in a legislative sense vicious, to ingraft general legislation upon an appropriation bill and allow committees of that kind to sit in judgment upon such subjects of general jurisdiction, do you not enter in a great degree upon the same objectionable ground when you propose to give a standing committee the functions of an Appropriations Committee? It is for Senators to consider whether the function of finding money to execute existing law, which is one thing, should be sent to your general committee in order that the two things may be combined, general legislation and appropriations. I do not think that is wise. If I understand the object for which these separations have been made, it has been in the endeavor to keep appropriation bills from features of general legislation; and the reason is obvious. I think equally so we ought to keep our standing committees free from the functions of general appropriations. For that reason I should be glad to see the Committee on Appropriations continue its functions in respect to the money needed to execute the laws made here for the District of Columbia, and the Committee on the District of Columbia have the power to report legislation fit and proper for the District; let the money be found and reported by one committee and the law under which it is to be expended be reported by another. I think there is a system of checks in that which is wise.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Delaware utterly fails in respect to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the appropriations for the support of the government of the District. It is true that the Appropriations Committee ought to simply report to us such sums as are necessary to carry into execution existing law. That is their function according to the rules, and that function they can perform very well in regard to all the expenditures of the Government except those in the river and harbor bill and the District of Columbia appropriation bill. From the very nature of these appropriations they are not susceptible of the test which is applied to other appropriation bills. Take up the naval appropriation bill; we can at once see whether or not the committee has gone beyond the requirements of existing law and can check them; but in regard to the appropriations for the District of Columbia, they can not be ascertained beforehand by law. I have here the estimates of appropriations for the support of the District of Columbia, and I venture to say that not one-tenth of the amounts which are contained in these items is fixed by law, nor can it be from the nature of the items.

What are the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia? They are not defined by law; they are not entirely regulated by law. The few officers named in the bill probably are provided for by law, but the great body of these expenditures is for streets, for alleys, and for public improvements of various kinds; nine-tenths of all the appropriations made for the District of Columbia are in their nature new items not fixed by existing law.

Mr. President, there is another reason why this bill ought to be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I can speak impartially because I do not belong to either committee. It is that the money appropriated by the bill is not our money; it is not the money of the Government that is being appropriated but it is the money of these people, the money of the people who live in this District. It is true the Government of the United States contributes one-half of it, but it contributes one-half of it as the owner of property in this District. It ought to be governed therefore by the interests of the people of this District, and not by the interests of the General Government.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator mean that the people of this District do contribute one-half the moneys spent here?

Mr. SHERMAN. One-half exactly.

Mr. BAYARD. When was that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the law. One-half is contributed by taxation; you and I as tax-payers pay our taxes.

Mr. BAYARD. We pay taxes; but I had no idea that the people of this District had to pay one-half the expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. One-half.

Mr. BAYARD. That may be one-half in regard to certain expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. More than one-half let me say; at least one-half of the regular appropriations. The Government of the United States appropriates out of the Treasury the same amount as is levied by general taxation on the District, and the people of the District also contribute special taxes in the form of licenses, &c., so that the people of this District pay more than one-half of the money that is disbursed here, and the United States only contributes the other half from a sense of justice, because it owns property here.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask a question of the Senator, for I desire to understand him? I never believed that the people of this District ought to pay one-half of all the money spent here, because these expenses are not for their benefit. This is a kind of Federal depot to which the entire country comes, and we can not expect the local inhabitants here to bear all the taxation necessary. Let me ask the Senator this: when for instance a million and a half of money, I think $1,600,000, over a year ago upon the recommendation of the Senator from Tennessee now in the chair was appropriated for water-works in this city, did the citizens here pay any portion of that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand not.

Mr. BAYARD. Not a dollar.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is considered simply a Government work, necessary for the protection of the Government.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not object to it; I am only asking about the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. If any citizen of this District avails himself of the use of that water, that citizen is charged a water tax and is obliged to pay the water tax. My friend pays it.

Mr. BAYARD. And I may add do not get the water.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in order to relieve that last objection that the appropriation was made. That work is the property of the Government of the United States, and if we avail ourselves, as citizens, of the use of that property we have to pay our tax for it.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does not the tax go to the District of Columbia, and not to the Government of the United States?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me a word in respect to the appropriation made to complete the water-works a year ago, I wish to say that as the bill passed the Senate the appropriation was made from the Treasury, and the Government was, according to the provisions of the bill as it passed here, to pay the whole expense; but the House amended it by requiring the District to pay one-half of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know that.

Mr. HARRIS. And the committee of conference finally agreed upon some compromise, the exact terms of which I can not now state, but by referring to the act you will find that the people of the District, if they do not pay one-half of it, pay what approximates very nearly to one-half of that entire expense. The people of the District pay, as the Senator from Ohio has already stated, fully one-half or more than one-half of every expenditure made for the District of Columbia, and that is regulated by what is known as the organic act of 1878.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. President, let me go back to the argument. The argument in favor of the Committee on Appropriations fails entirely when you come to deal with a fund that is collected from private individuals to promote the ends of a public or private corporation. Another thing, the items making up this aggregate of appropriations are not defined by law, nor are they definable by law, but from the nature of the expenditures they are items granted from time to time to do work which can not be fixed by law, as the amount to be expended on a particular street and the like. It seems to me that this is a proper case where the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, just as a bill to pay a pension, which appropriates money to pay a particular pension for a particular individual, is referred to the Committee on Pensions, and is never sent to the Committee on Appropriations to provide ways and means for paying and ascertaining what should be the pension, but the bill itself provides for the amount.

I shall vote for the report of the Committee on Rules in this respect, referring this particular bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia. As to all the other appropriation bills, I think they ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, because they are bills of a general character, applying to the whole people of the United States and making appropriations of public money of the people of the United State for general purposes. I think if those bills were distributed among the various committees appertaining to the particular business it would lead to a large increase of public expenditure; but the reference of this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia can not increase the expenditure, because the amount of expenditure is fixed by the amount of taxation, and all the money that could be appropriated, if it exceeded the amount of taxes provided for and the amount to be supplied by the Government, would necessarily remain unexpended, because the law expressly provides that no money shall be expended, even though appropriated, in excess of the revenues of the Government, and there is no power in the District commissioners even now out of appropriations made by Congress to contract a debt to the amount of one cent or one dollar. If they do they are subject to very severe penalties, I believe. So the amount to be appropriated is already fixed by law, and the only question is, which committee can best judge of the wants of the people of this District.

I feel bound to say that I have observed on the floor here that when good complaints, honest complaints, have been made by the people of this District to the Committee on Appropriations, in the nature of things that committee could not give any heed to them because that committee is overwhelmed with other business and this is the least important of all the appropriation bills that it considers. There are complaints arising in the government of 180,000 people that ought to be heard by some one, questions of the amount for roads or repairs, questions as to the appropriation whether in this end or that end of the city. There has been a controversy here for years as to whether justice has been done in the distribution of the expenditure as between the eastern part of the city and other parts of the city. It is claimed that the great body of the money expended is spent up where the wealthy people live and they get the benefit of all the appropriations, whereas those who pay a large share of the taxes, though in smaller sums, who live in a more obscure part of the city, are not fairly dealt with. That is not a complaint that the Committee on Appropriations can listen to; but there is a committee organized to take care of the interests of the people of this District, that is organized with a view to protect their interests and to hear their complaints, and that committee can be approached any day and any hour upon matters of local and minor importance.

It seems to me that the Senate ought to give to the people of this District one committee where they can complain of the appropriations excessive in one part of the city and deficient in another, where they can make their wants known, and I assure you that I know that has been a practical trouble. The people of this District, poor people, have come to me and made their complaints about it. It seems to me they ought to be heard before the committee set aside by this body to listen to their matters and take care of their business, and that their money put in the hands of the Government for the purpose of taking care of the interests of this District ought to be controlled, regulated, doled out, parceled out if you please, by that committee which has charge of the interests of the people of the District.

Therefore, with every respect to the Committee on Appropriations which is charged with a great and important function, and with no willingness on my part to take away from them one particle of the important duties they are called upon to discharge, I do think that this in the interest of the people of this District is an important and desirable change, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have no personal wish with respect to this modification of the rules, although my judgment is against its adoption; but the Senator from Ohio has put into my mind a good many arguments against the proposition. He seems to think that the Committee on Appropriations is responsible for the fact that streets have been improved in one section of the city and neglected to be improved in another section of the city, and very properly and truly says that the Committee on Appropriations can not be approached upon that subject.

It is well enough for us to understand the exact relations of the Government of the United States to the District of Columbia. Prior to 1878, when this District was put in chancery by the selection of three commissioners to govern it, the District proper for a time made its assessment of taxes and appropriated the money received therefrom; but the Government of the United States during all that period of time also appropriated money for the District of Columbia. The entire Metropolitan police of this District prior to 1878, and I believe prior to 1880, was paid for out of the public Treasury. The courts of the United States in this District are wholly paid to-day out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Not the police court.

Mr. ALLISON. The police court is sustained by fines, as the Senator very well knows.

Mr. INGALLS. No.

Mr. ALLISON. The salary of the judge of the police court is paid by the Government of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Only one-half.

Mr. ALLISON. I may be mistaken as to that, but the police court is a self-sustaining court. The Reform School up to a recent date was appropriated for out of the Treasury of the United States. In 1878 there was a long discussion as to the relation of the people of this District to the Government of the United States with reference to public property and private property, and the Congress of the United States agreed that for purposes of compromise and adjustment with regard to these matters the Government of the United States should pay one-half the expenses of this District, and that the other half should be raised by taxation, so that the Metropolitan police, the Reform School, and some other of the charitable institutions of this District are put in this common pool, or pot, as it may be called, and the expenses divided. But there are to-day a large number of institutions in this District the expenses of which are wholly paid by the United States, and, as my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations will bear me witness, one of the difficult things we have to do in that committee is to decide whether or not the Government of the United States shall pay the whole of these appropriations or whether some of them shall be divided between the United States and the people of this District.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would ask the Senator from Iowa if I am not correct in this, that where the appropriations are all paid out of the general Treasury they are put in the miscellaneous or other bills?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. SHERMAN. And therefore where the Government pays the whole of the expenses the item would not go into this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly not. And that is just what I am trying to say, that the controversy with the District of Columbia is whether a certain appropriation ought to go into the sundry civil bill or whether it shall go into this District of Columbia bill, under which one-half the expense is paid by the District. The aim and effort of the people of this District is to throw off as much as possible of these expenditures upon what is called the sundry civil bill, so that they may be paid by the Government of the United States, rather than to include them in the District of Columbia bill, where one-half the expense is to be paid by the District of Columbia. One of the great controversies we have had in the Committee on Appropriations has been to decide whether or not this or that item of appropriation shall be divided fairly and justly between the Government and the District of Columbia or whether the whole of it shall be paid by the Government of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, with his permission, if he intends to be understood that the Committee on Appropriations is the only committee of this body that can divide fairly and properly the expenditures as between the sundry civil and the District appropriation bills or as between the people of the District and the Government of the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a most pertinent question put in a most polite way, and therefore I will answer the Senator from Tennessee that if I have intimated any such thing as he seems to suggest I have been mistaken in the words I have used. I know perfectly well that any committee of this body is capable of taking charge of the particular subjects assigned to it; and, as I stated in the beginning, I have no feeling in regard to this question, whether the bill now spoken of shall be given to the Appropriations Committee or whether it shall be given to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have no doubt the latter committee will discharge the duty imposed upon it by this rule with fidelity if it is assigned there. I was only endeavoring to answer some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Ohio, that the Committee on Appropriations is responsible for the complaints made here by people with reference to this being done or that not being done. If the Senate will take note of the laws of Congress they will observe that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are required annually to make estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury of what streets ought to be improved and the character of improvement to be made. We have had in the Committee on Appropriations no discretion as to whether the street paving shall be on East Capitol street or whether it shall be on Fourteenth street, leading to the Soldiers' Home, where the palatial mansions of which we have heard are being reared. It is because we have had no discretion in these matters that we have had numerous complaints made against us in the committee-room and on this floor by Senators with reference to appropriations in this part of the city or that part of the city. I know perfectly well that the Committee on Appropriations, with reference to these local matters, is not able always to do what is wanted by different citizens of the District of Columbia. We have only endeavored in the best way possible to carry out the laws as we have found them on your statute-book. When the law requires that the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make an estimate of what streets shall be improved and the amount required to be appropriated we have never exercised any judgment whatever with respect to the matter except to cut down the total sum.

Now, as a matter of course, if appropriations can be shifted from the District of Columbia over to the Government of the United States by any process, more money can be used in ornamenting and decorating this city, because the amount raised by taxation is a fixed sum, and we are required to appropriate an equal sum; and therefore if some charitable association is appropriated for wholly out of the Treasury, it leaves one-half of that sum in addition to the sum raised by taxation and appropriated in the regular District bill to go to the decoration and ornamentation of this city. Of course the Committee on the District of Columbia will be as careful of these things, possibly more careful of them, than has been the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, one word with reference to the allegation that there are no laws as to the subject of appropriations in this District. With the exception of streets and alleys and sewers the estimates are as particular and as definite for every officer of the District of Columbia as they are with reference to every officer of the United States as defined by law. Of course with regard to streets and alleys and sewers there can not be any fixed sum, because it rests and must rest in the discretion of the two Houses of Congress.

I wish to say a word further with reference to this rule in connection with this and other appropriation bills. It is said that it is the disposition of the Committee on Appropriations to aggrandize to itself power in this body and to ingraft upon its bills legislation. I ask any Senator whether the Committee on Appropriations has in a single instance within the last two years reported legislation upon appropriation bills? I know of no instance. We have resisted it everywhere and as firmly as we could. Unfortunately (and I regret it exceedingly) the committee that has taken care of these local matters in the District of Columbia did not address itself more particularly to this great embarrassment in this rule. They have made no modification of the rule with respect to the very thing which gives us the most trouble in the Senate. They have reported the old rule here, verbatim et literatim I believe, which refuses the privilege of putting legislation upon appropriation bills in this body. We have the singular paradox of coming into the Senate with appropriation bills loaded down with legislation that comes from the House of Representatives, put there under the rules of the House and sent to us for consideration and action; and yet we stand here without the power of amending this legislation in a single particular. They have tied us up by these rules so that we can not amend legislation in an appropriation bill, although that bill may come here checkered and cross-barred with legislation on every page and every line.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me—I do not see the chairman of the committee in his seat and I see one of the members of it in the chair—I will state that the difficulty in regard to legislative amendments to appropriation bills grew out of the action of the other House. We can control so far as our amendments are concerned; the Senate can control itself under our present rules but can go no further. The matter the Senator speaks of is provided for in the joint rules. They are a part of this report and will have to be considered in connection with the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. The subject has not been overlooked. The Committee on Rules agree with the Senator as to the importance of a change in the rules of the House, and in the joint rules reported I think we have made provisions that if adopted by the two Houses will cure the whole difficulty heretofore experienced.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there seems to be no necessity for the iteration and reiteration of the statement that the Committee on Appropriations is constantly aggrandizing power, when it has stood up here resolutely for the last two years and resisted legislation upon appropriation bills when the legislation has been proposed in the Senate, and did not during the last Congress undertake to amend legislation that was sent to us from the House.

I believe from my knowledge (which is limited, I admit) and my experience in reference to this matter that it is not wise to segregate this appropriation bill from the other appropriation bills. The District of Columbia bill is a child. It is only two or three years old. Until the last three years the appropriations for the District of Columbia were always embodied in what is known as the sundry civil bill. The District appropriation bill is a new bill. It is the latest and newest of all the appropriation bills. Now it may be wise, I do not say that it is not—indeed I would not undertake to say from my position that it would not be wise—to abolish the Committee on Appropriations and send each and every one of the appropriation bills to the respective committees having charge of the subjects to which they relate. It is not for me to say that. I do not know but that that would be wise. I think my friend near me [Mr. INGALLS] would concur in that, because he certainly is of opinion that this particular matter can best be cared for by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I do not say that it can not be; but it does seem to me that the argument which would submit this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia would also turn over the Army appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, the naval appropriation bill to the Naval Committee, and so on. I have no care about it; it will be a great relief to the Committee on Appropriations to have this bill considered by the District of Columbia Committee, though I do not think it wise to do so.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the question about the expenditures for the increase of the water supply of the District was raised by the Senator from Delaware; and the suggestion was made in response to him, by the Senator from Iowa I think, that the Government paid the entire expense of that improvement. It is true that in the sense of advancing the money to pay for it the Government is to pay the entire expense; but the proviso in connection with the passage of the bill was this:

> That one-half the cost of said improvement, excluding the fish-way, shall be annually computed and stated by the Treasurer of the United States, and charged to a capital account on the books of the Treasury, and that interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum thereon shall be annually computed and charged to said account, and that any surplus of water-rents over and above the expense of maintaining the works and appendages and paying the charges for interest and sinking fund for the redemption of outstanding bonds heretofore issued for the extension of said water-works in the city of Washington shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States by the officer who may be charged with the collection of the same, and credited to the account thus created, until the same shall be finally extinguished; and the water-rents shall be so regulated from time to time as to be at least sufficient to pay the expenses of maintaining the said works and appendages and the interest on the capital account created in accordance with this provision in addition to charges now imposed thereon by law. After the extinguishment of said account and until further action by Congress the surplus water-rents shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

So it is the intention, and was the purpose in the passage of this law, to compel the payment of one-half the entire expense of increasing the water supply of the District by the consumers by reason of the sinking fund that is to be created from the excess of water-rents, and the commissioners are directed to fix the water-rents so as to provide for this sinking fund that shall entinguish one-half of the cost of this improvement. The Government, therefore, pays one-half of that improvement and the residents of the District pay the other half in the way that I have suggested, by the payment of their water-rates, which are so computed as to form an excess over and above the operating expenditures that shall constitute a sinking fund which shall ultimately extinguish one-half of the entire amount appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Kansas think that is a very hard provision in view of the fact that the United States to-day is paying one-half of the interest on a debt of this District and this city of more than $30,000,000 and providing one-half of the sinking fund which shall extinguish that principal of $30,000,000?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa will not divert me from the consideration of this question by any appeal to prejudice in consequence of the fact that the Government pays a large amount upon the capitalized debt of this District. I do not think the Government pays a half of what it ought to pay in this District. When the contest came up in 1878 as to the relative position occupied by the Government and the people here and the question of taxation was considered, I resisted the effort that was made to compel the payment of 50 per cent. by the people of this District. They ought not to be asked to pay one-half of the expenses of this District. It is an outrage upon them. The expenses here are enormously in excess of what would be required in an ordinary municipal corporation. The width of the streets, the parks, the expenditure of water for ornamental purposes, everything that is done here is on a gigantic scale, and I believe the Government ought to pay 75 per cent. of the taxes here. I think it would be equitable, it would be just.

Mr. BAYARD. May I suggest to the Senator another fact, that the people of this District have no voice in their own government?

Mr. INGALLS. I am very glad they have none. That experiment was tried sufficiently. We had popular government and universal suffrage here, and the result was an expenditure that was not entirely satisfactory either to the Government or to the tax-payers; and when the fathers and founders of the Republic declared that the United States should have exclusive jurisdiction over the District where the Federal capital should be located, I think it was a very wise provision to exclude popular suffrage as an element in the government of that District.

But I was saying a word about the expenditures of this District in response to a remark made by the Senator from Iowa, evidently in the ad captandum spirit, to show that there ought to be still further limitation because there had hitherto been extraordinary expenditure; and upon that point I will make another observation, Mr. President.

There has been a great deal of animadversion in this country upon the expenditures that have been made in this District for the improvement of the streets and for other public works which have been carried on at the expense that has been named by him. I regret, sir, that more was not expended. I will say in response to the Senator from Iowa that there never has been $30,000,000 expended in this country in public improvements that was expended more to the satisfaction of the people of the entire country, and there never has been $30,000,000 expended for which there is more to show than there is for that; and these men who have been maligned, and who have been aspersed, and who have been vilified and pursued by newspaper detraction and held up and pilloried as deserving of public execration are benefactors of this community, and instead of being denounced and decried they deserve approbation, and they ought to have, and they will have yet, monuments erected in their memory.

I am no believer in a niggardly policy about this District and about this city. I believe in the widest possible beneficence and generosity. We have exclusive jurisdiction here, and this was intended to be the national city. It ought to be in all its appointments a fitting representative of the wealth, of the taste, of the grandeur of this people; and the Senator from Iowa will not obtain public approbation by advocating, even in an indirect way, the policy of niggardliness in appropriations made here by the Government.

I stand here in no sense whatever as the apologist for what has been done, but as the advocate and defender of it, and to say that I regret that the system of improvements which was marked out by the men who have been hitherto execrated was not carried out to its fullest extent. It would to-day have been a benefit to this people, it would have been an honor to this country, if $50,000,000 had been expended rather than $30,000,000. There is not a citizen of this country who knows this District, who knows what it is here for, who would not willingly contribute his share of the expense necessary to pay the interest upon that debt.

The Senator from Iowa attempted also to correct me in another particular, and stated that the courts of this District were entirely paid for by the Government. When I said that the police court was an exception, he endeavored to avoid the force of my observation by saying that that was paid out of fees. Now, mark how plain a tale shall put the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations down. On page 141 of the laws of the United States for the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, under the head of "courts," is one paragraph, which I will not read in detail, but in which the aggregate in all is $12,918 that is appropriated for the purposes of that court alone; and when the Senator states that it is paid for from fees he shows an additional reason why the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia should be referred to a body that has information upon these subjects.

As the Senator from Delaware appeared to be somewhat uncertain as to the fact that the appropriation was half paid from the revenues of the District, let me read the enacting clause of the appropriation act:

Be it enacted, &c., That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Then follows the whole list of objects for which appropriation is made, including the Aqueduct, the institutions of charity, reformation, and prisons, the general expenses for the payment of the salaries of the officers, for the streets of the city, for the Metropolitan police, for the fire department, for the courts, for the public schools, for the markets, and miscellaneous expenses, including the health department, the interest on the sinking fund, and the water department.

Mr. President, I have no interest in this matter other than that of a friend of this District. I am a believer in the city of Washington as the great national city. There are 160,000, or, it may be, 180,000, people located within this territory over which the Government of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction by the Constitution. It was designed as a place for the seat of Government, and I think that when the framers of the Constitution and the founders of the Republic decided that they would have a Federal city, and that it should not be located in any great commercial or manufacturing metropolis where there are liable to be vast numbers of unemployed people to whom appeals might be made in cases of great popular excitement, they did well. The revolutions in France have been more frequently due to the presence of a vast excitable and unemployed population in Paris than to any other one fact in their history. I venture to say that if in 1876 and 1877, during the great contest over the disputed Presidential election, the seat of the Federal Government had been in New York, or in Philadelphia, or in Baltimore, where great masses of people could have been appealed to, the danger of a civil war or a revolution would have been increased a thousand-fold. It is a protection to this Government, it is one of the safeguards of our institutions, that this seat of government is located in this place over which Congress has exclusive jurisdiction.

These people, as the Senator from Delaware has said, have no voice practically in the disposition of their revenues. They are tax-payers; they own vast amounts of property here; and taxes are levied upon them by Congress, by a power superior to them, over which they have no control, and to which they can make no appeal, except through the committee in either House of Congress created for the purpose of advising upon the subject of the government of this District.

I have no observations to make upon the conduct of the Committee on Appropriations. It is an able committee, but that it has absorbed to a very great extent the functions of all the committees of this body I think goes without saying. It assumes to pass upon matters that are never referred to the appropriate committees and that are left until the very close of the session, when there is no possibility of consideration by the appropriate committees; and then they are precipitated upon us and we are compelled to vote "yea" or "nay" under the menace that if we do not vote "yea" or "nay" the necessary appropriations will be prevented. Sir, that is wrong, utterly wrong; and the reasons which have been presented by the Senator from Ohio and others who have spoken upon this subject in favor of permitting the Committee on the District of Columbia to report upon this bill are overwhelming.

I know that there are "enterprises of great pith and moment" here that are "turned awry" every session of Congress because the Committee on Appropriations is not advised about what is necessary. Take the great Boundary sewer here, that is intended to discharge all the surface drainage that comes from the north, on the one side toward Rock Creek and on the other toward the Eastern Branch, so as to prevent that accumulation of water coming from the rainfall which has hitherto filled up the sewers and prevented the proper drainage of the city. Insufficient appropriations have been made, the work has been delayed, the health of the city has been imperiled, great sanitary conditions have been disregarded, simply because the Committee on Appropriations refused to permit the necessary amounts to be reported by that committee, and why? Because they did not know anything about the necessity of the work; they could not know anything about the necessity of it. It is for the Committee on the District of Columbia to examine into these questions and to report what legislation in their judgment is necessary. I say it is not only appropriate, but it is no increase of the powers of that committee. I would not, as the Senator from Arkansas intimated, have the Committee on Appropriations emasculated; I would take no step in that direction; but I believe that the interests of 180,000 people would be promoted by such a course; and I believe further, that the interests of the Government would be promoted. Inasmuch as this bill is one that does not come within the general purview of appropriations, inasmuch as there is an entirely new element introduced, the Senator from Iowa certainly can take no umbrage, because there is no stigma attached to his committee and no reflection upon his eminent services by the course proposed by the amendment offered to the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in response to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas. I stated when I was up before that the expenses of the courts of this District were paid by the United States. The Senator from Kansas, in his seat, said the police court was not so paid. At the moment I supposed it probably was the case, but a moment's reflection, with the law before me, disclosed what is true, that the police court is appropriated for in the District appropriation bill. But what I subsequently stated also remains true, that the police court of this District is self-sustaining; that it is not a charge either upon the District government or the Government of the United States; all the fines, penalties, forfeitures, and fees are paid into the District treasury. So that, with all my ignorance and want of knowledge, I happened to state the facts as they exist.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations and have been for a good while, and as such I assure you that personally I care nothing about the District appropriation bill. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], now the acting President of the Senate, struck the real point that has been put by every committee to the Committee on Appropriations when it insists that it ought to be allowed to look over those matters. He asked the question if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations thought that other committees and other gentlemen on other committees were not as competent to do that work as they were. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have demanded jurisdiction over post-office matters, and have put the same question. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has asked the same question, and done it in the same way; and so the Senator from Kansas tells us we did not understand all about that sewer. We were told by the Naval Committee: "You do not as members of the Appropriations Committee understand anything about the steel vessels we ought to build, and the thousand things that we learn on our committee." So the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads tells us: "Our intercourse with the Post-Office Department has given us information that you gentlemen can not have;" so say the Military Committee; so say all.

This is the beginning of a raid on the Appropriations Committee that if allowed to proceed can not be resisted, because each committee will claim that it has special knowledge and special information that the Committee on Appropriations does not have and can not have, because of the intimate relations of the various committees with the different Departments; and it will end in abolishing the Committee on Appropriations substantially. Perhaps that may be a good thing to do. It is a good way to get money out of the Treasury; there is no doubt about that.

Each committee of the Senate very properly is constituted so as to be the adviser of the particular Department whose interests are committed to its care. The Committee on the District of Columbia is composed of as good men as any other committee, for we are all alike good; and it is a rule that the men representing the States and districts nearest to the District of Columbia are always as a matter of right placed upon that committee. Why? Because they are supposed to be the special friends of the District.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BECK. I really prefer, as this is an important subject and is going to be very far-reaching before we are through with it, that we should adjourn till after the holidays, and think about this matter, or pass it over along with the other matter that was passed over until it can be further thought of. Therefore I yield to anybody.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the rule which we are considering now, relating to appropriations, be passed over until the remaining rules have been considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa that the rule now under consideration, No. 17, be passed over until the other rules have been considered and acted upon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SURRENDER OF WASHINGTON'S COMMISSION.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. GROOME. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length at the Clerk's desk for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas on the 23d day of December, A. D. 1783, at the city of Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, George Washington surrendered his commission as the commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America; and

Whereas that act of patriotic devotion to the principles of the Revolution, the success of which established the independence of the Colonies and secured the liberties of the people of the United States, is deserving of special recognition upon the centennial return of that memorable event: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to issue a proclamation, recommending the people, either by appropriate exercises in connection with the religious services of the 23d instant, or by such public observances as they may deem proper on Monday, the 24th instant, to commemorate this signal event in the history of American liberty.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to order the national salute to be fired from the various forts throughout the country on Monday, December 24, 1883.

Mr. GROOME. The House of Representatives having passed this joint resolution, and it being clear from its terms that it will fall to the ground unless acted upon to-day, it seems to me but courteous to the other House that I should ask that the Senate at this time proceed to its consideration. I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered without displacing the business before the Senate.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed

TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the Executive communication on the President's table be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following communication, which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 20, 1883.

The honorable the President of the Senate pro tempore:

SIR: In answer to Senate resolution of the 13th instant I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of all papers on file in this "Department relating to the attempted transfer by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company of its land grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Companies of Arizona, New Mexico, and California; also copies of any memorials, briefs, or letters relating to the matter of land grants or subsidies to said Texas and Pacific Railroad." I may add that no action has been taken by this Department on the subject.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the communication and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection they will be so referred.

Mr. INGALLS. And printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no objection to their being printed, but there may be some papers which are very voluminous which it might not be necessary to print. However, if the Senator desires it, let them be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. Let them be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire the order to print to be entered?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GROOME. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; and the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock Monday next. [A pause.] The Chair desires to call the attention of Senators before they depart from the Chamber to the fact that while the Chair understood that the Senate would adjourn over from to-day until Monday, the Secretary informs the Chair that no such resolution is of record. Such was the understanding of the Chair and the Chair so announced, but the Chair would rather follow the record than follow his own understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate now adjourn until Monday, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, assuming that by unanimous consent the former announcement of adjournment was reconsidered, will put the question on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas, that the Senate now adjourn until Monday, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 24, at 12 o'clock, meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 20, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CALL OF STATES FOR THE INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of many members on both sides of the House I ask unanimous consent that, after disposing of the reports of the Committee on Rules, the States may be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions as on Mondays. Gentlemen are here who desire to leave for the holidays, and wish to have their bills presented to the committees of the House before going. I do not suppose there will be any objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that after the House has disposed of the report already made by the Committee on Rules—or does the gentleman refer to the several reports to be made by the committee?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; after the entire subject is disposed of.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania listen to a suggestion? It will take some time to call the States, and I ask that he modify his request, that the Speaker, by unanimous consent, receive bills from any member who has them in his possession and desires to present them.

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite willing, as that accomplishes my object. It would accomplish the same thing, but I think the method which I have suggested would save confusion.

Mr. CALKINS. The only reason I made the suggestion was for the purpose of saving time.

Mr. RANDALL. I am disposed on reflection not to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, and hope that he will not insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will not save time to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. The more speedy method will be by calling the States.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I withdraw the suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the House. Is there objection, after disposing of the report from the Committee on Rules, to the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.

ADDITIONAL FUND FOR FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House to submit for passage the resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk, which I will ask to have read, and just state the facts connected with it in one moment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, the sum of $1,420, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the rental value of a building to be occupied by the folding department of the House and for the expense of transportation of public documents for the use of the House for the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, allowing the right of objection to remain with every member of the House, I will only say that is a proposition to cover expenses after the 1st day of January for the rent of the building used for the folding-room of the House and for the transportation of documents and the hire of a horse and driver. Hitherto the appropriation has been made to run with the fiscal year, for years past, until the sundry civil bill of last year, which I hold in my hand, in which a provision was incorporated, which will be found on page 34, for this purpose, extending the appropriation only up to the 1st day of January. This House will not be in session on the 1st of January. The public documents of the Government will not have any building in which to be stored, nor will there be any provision made for their care or custody, or for the hire of a horse engaged in the transportation of them, unless this temporary relief be accorded by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL PAY TO DISCHARGED EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Speaker, in offering the resolution relating to the compensation of discharged employés of the House on yesterday I must confess that I was surprised to hear an objection to it come from this side of the House. One consideration alone would lead my judgment to support this proposition. I think it ought to be passed without a dissenting voice. If an objection exists, now is not the time to interpose it. If it stood here as an original proposition, I am free to say that I should oppose it. But I could not under existing circumstances interpose my voice or my vote against the passage of this resolution. That one consideration is this: For six years the Democratic party had power in this House. The other side of the House was in the minority, but they generously, cheerfully awarded to Democratic employés the compensation provided for by this resolution. We stood ready, and not only ready, but cheerfully and joyfully accepted the gift. In the last Congress, when they had the majority and we were in the minority, it was again tendered and accepted by this side of the House. Now we come again into the majority and they are in the minority, and their employés, our employés, the employés of this whole country, are asking this little pittance of award at our hands, and I say no objection should come from the Democratic side of the House.

If at another time, when we are even on this question, it comes up as an original proposition I may be found voting against it; but I do not want to be regarded as joining in any game of "heads I win, tails you lose."

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Does he want the House to understand that the extra compensation given to employés began with the Forty-fourth Congress? Does he not know it is true that the practice antedated that many years?

Mr. GEDDES. I say this, that the first opportunity that Democratic employés had to receive this extra compensation they received it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not want the gentleman to put this side of the House in the attitude of having inaugurated this matter, which was the fair inference from what he stated.

Mr. GEDDES. I do not desire to be so understood. I only desire to be understood as saying that having accepted this extra compensation, we ought not now decline to give it.

I believe this objection came in the real spirit of economy, and I join most heartily in that. I want to be numbered among the strictest of that sect; but there are occasions for the application of that principle, and there are other times when we would be suspected of sheer humbuggery when we talk about it. I want no sham; I want it real when it comes; I want to begin at the bung-hole. I am unwilling to allow as mere incidental expenses to the executive department, to the President of the United States, $75,000 and allow these poor boys to go home paying their own fare.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, as my friend from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] has gone so extensively into the merits of this question, I feel that it would not be inappropriate for me to give the reasons why I asked that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and be considered with something more of deliberateness than was about to characterize us yesterday evening. I agree with him in that spirit of economy that he says he is going to enter upon. But it is proper for us to understand what the custom of the House has been, and I undertake to say that the gentleman has not presented accurately the custom. As he states, there has been an extra month's pay given as a customary thing to the employés of the House at the end of the session through which they have served; and the employés that are sought to be reached by this resolution got that extra month's pay at the close of the last session of Congress. That will not be denied. At the last Congress, for the first time so far as I have been able to see, a resolution went through giving to the discharged employés of the class that are affected by this resolution one month's extra pay. I have searched the record, and have searched it in vain, for any instance in which it was done prior to that time.

Mr. GEDDES. I trust the gentleman will, right in that connection, make the necessary explanation, because it might be inferred from what he has said that this is not in substance the same resolution as has been adopted heretofore. I admit that in the last Congress and now again one class of employés have been added who are not included in the former action of the two Houses; but that is an unimportant matter, and, so far as I care, they may be stricken out. That does not reach the main body of employés. That runs back also of the time to which I have referred.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The custom of paying a month's extra pay at the close of the session through which employés have served has run back for a number of years; but that of paying those who were discharged and did not serve through a session I believe has not been a custom heretofore. That is the distinction which I desire to draw, and I simply wanted to state the facts to the House. Let the House act upon them as they see fit.

Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the Chair if this resolution is up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It was offered yesterday, and on objection being made, was allowed to go over until to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. Then it is now up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. REAGAN. We are here not representing ourselves, but representing our respective constituencies. We are here not making charitable donations of our own money, but voting away money of other people. Our experience has been that in public bodies like this there is great liberality generally indulged when men are engaged in voting away the money of other people. When they are called upon to pay money out of their own pockets they are not inclined, perhaps, to be so liberal.

I do not care what the precedents have been. The custom has been wrong from the beginning, and there never can be a better time to correct it than now. We employ men under the law, specifying what their compensation shall be, and upon that understanding they enter upon the discharge of the duties of the offices which they fill. It is in the nature of a contract between the Government and them that they shall receive so much compensation. Then we propose after they have received that compensation to make a donation of an additional amount. Why should this be done? These men get ample compensation for the services rendered; so ample that whenever the House is to be organized there is a scramble sufficient to disgust any man on earth for these positions. They are not compelled, as my friend suggests, to take this compensation. They take it from choice, and they are well paid for their services. But we can point to a million of men in this country not receiving anything like such compensation, and who perform not such easy service as this, but who perform toilsome manual labor. If you hire them at ten dollars or at twenty dollars a month, when the year expires or the six months expire you do not propose to give them out of your pocket a month's additional wages, although they are not like these men who have already received one month's additional wages; but you tell them, "There is your pay according to your contract; that is fair between us."

It may be that this may be thought one of the ways of reducing the surplus which now so encumbers the Treasury. But if we wish to teach our people to plunder the Treasury, if we wish to teach them that they are to obtain something for nothing, which is one of the great heresies of our age, such resolutions as this is the way to teach them to go into a scramble in order to draw from the Treasury something that does not belong to them, and to produce a condition of demoralization and dishonesty which is eating into the very vitals of this Government—of every department of it, executive and legislative, if not judicial.

I have no hope of resisting successfully the passage of this resolution, for it is other people's money that we are giving away. We propose, without consideration, without justification, to make ourselves exceedingly pleasant to some people by giving other people's money to those that are around us here. I have thus stated briefly some of the considerations that will induce me to vote against this resolution and to hope most sincerely that it may be defeated.

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEDDES. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has considered one thing, that I have no doubt originally and all along the line has influenced the members of this House? That is, that the employés of the Senate have been receiving a much larger compensation for less work than the employés of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not thought of that just now and in this connection; but I have thought of it on several occasions most seriously. I have felt that it was a disgrace to this House that it consented to a law which permitted the employés of the Senate to receive so much more than the employés of the House, although we are paying our own employés most liberally. That, however, is the fault of the Senate, and if they can answer to their constituents for that fault they may do so. I do not propose to imitate their example and plunder the Treasury for the benefit of friends or partisans.

Mr. KEIFER. I simply desire to state, so that gentlemen may not suppose that we are voting away large sums of money by this resolution, that the class of persons the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] speaks of as being included in this resolution for the second time only——

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit me to offer an amendment and have it read?

Mr. KEIFER. I will do so.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I do not propose to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"The provisions of this resolution shall not apply to employés of this House on the annual roll who entered into its service within one month of the close of the last session."

Mr. KEIFER. I was about to state what I think is true so far as this resolution is concerned, that this is the second time that a resolution has been introduced into this House that included extra pay for the Capitol police. I think the last Congress passed a resolution of that kind for the first time. That is the class of persons referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] as being included in a measure of this kind for the second time only.

In order that gentlemen may not be distressed about this matter I will state that I am just informed that no member of the Capitol police has yet been discharged, and therefore this resolution would not apply to that class of persons. I am not prepared to say that it would be well to strike them out. There may have been one discharged, but I think not one has been yet discharged. That being the case, this resolution will therefore not appropriate any money for them.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman say that none of the Capitol police would receive money under this resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. None of them would receive it unless they had been discharged from service by a certain day. I think there has been no one yet discharged, though there may have been one.

And it was suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that a month's extra pay was given to the employés of the House at the close of the last Congress. But the gentleman ought to have said that that was only usual and ordinary. At the close of the Forty-sixth Congress we had one of the most remarkable struggles between the House and the Senate over that very question. When the conferees on the part of the House on an appropriation bill came into the House and reported that the Senate would not allow the one month's extra pay for the House employés, and they had agreed to strike it out, this House rejected the conference report and referred the matter to a new conference committee. And then, upon my motion, a resolution was adopted instructing our conferees to go back to the Senate and say that the House would never agree to a report unless the extra month's pay was given to the employés of the House. The conferees did as they were ordered by the House, it was agreed to, and the House employés were paid. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] knows very well what that struggle was.

Mr. BLOUNT. I recollect very well the contest to which the gentleman refers. That compensation was allowed in order to equalize the salaries of the employés of the Senate and the House.

Mr. KEIFER. And that was what it was given for at the last session.

Mr. GEDDES. I now call the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I want to make an inquiry.

Mr. GEDDES. I will yield for a question.

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me for a moment to refer to a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] in regard to the Capitol police.

Mr. GEDDES. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I see by reference to the resolution that it provides—

That the officers and employés of the House, including the Capitol police who were employed on the 3d day of December, 1883, and who have ceased or who shall, prior to the 1st day of February, 1884, cease to be employed, &c.

That would include all who might be discharged before the 1st day of February.

Mr. COBB. I desire to inquire of both the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES and Mr. KEIFER] concerning one thing. I understand the fact to be that the Doorkeeper of the last House, who had a large number of employés under him, at the close of the last session of Congress turned off those employés who had been actively engaged in the service of the House during the last session of Congress and put new men in their places, who performed no duty whatever during the summer months and until the meeting of the present Congress.

Now, if those men or employés are to be paid this month's extra compensation I think it would be unjust, I think it would be not right to pay them. I understand it to be true that after turning off those who had actively performed service during the last session of Congress these men were put in their places and have performed no service whatever.

Now, is this a fact? I understand it to be true; and I understand that the Doorkeeper gave employment to a person interested with him in business by turning off another party, and that the person thus appointed performed no service whatever. Yet under this resolution, as I understand, that man would get the benefit of the additional pay. If this is the fact it is not right. This matter ought to be looked into and not passed hastily. Of course what I have stated as my understanding I do not know to be true, but I have learned it from such a source that I believe it to be true, and unless it is denied I shall take it for granted that it is the fact.

Mr. KEIFER. I know nothing about it.

Mr. GEDDES. As this question has been raised, I desire simply to say I have assumed that these officers performed their duty, judging from my knowledge of the practice of the Democratic party. If anything of the kind charged has occurred, I hope some member of the household on the other side will make it known. But I protest against allowing this entire proposition to go over or to be trodden under foot by a mere naked charge unsupported. Unless this charge is admitted to be true, I insist upon immediate action on this resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment or two.

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. COBB. I wish to move an amendment to this proposition.

Mr. GEDDES. I move the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I presume the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] will not take me off the floor.

Mr. GEDDES. I have moved the previous question and yielded to the gentleman from Indiana for the purpose of making an inquiry. He took his seat and now rises under the advantage I then gave him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio to demand the previous question——

Mr. GEDDES. I did.

The SPEAKER. And he suspended for a moment in order that some gentleman might propound a question to him.

Mr. GEDDES. I would be very glad to yield, but half a dozen other gentlemen have made similar requests.

Mr. SINGLETON. I am required to give my vote on this proposition, yet am not permitted to state my reasons.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on the call for the previous question?

Mr. GEDDES. I do.

Mr. SINGLETON. Then I shall have to vote against the resolution.

Mr. GEDDES. I shall regret that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the previous question on the resolution and includes in the demand, as the Chair understands, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

The previous question was ordered, there being—ayes 101, noes 74.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask whether it is not in order now to move to commit the resolution?

The SPEAKER. With instructions.

Mr. SINGLETON. I desire to call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] make a motion to commit with instructions? The rule permits such a motion to be made pending the demand for the previous question or after it has been ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Accounts, when appointed, with instructions to report at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Texas to accept as an amendment this provision: that the committee be instructed to inquire whether persons were employed immediately upon the close of the last session, and if so, that the committee be instructed so to amend the resolution that such persons shall not receive this extra pay.

Mr. REAGAN. I will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The proposition had better be reduced to writing.

Mr. CALKINS. While that is being done I desire to ask unanimous consent to submit, in order that it may go with the resolution and take whatever course it takes, a provision to allow one month's extra pay to Judge Clisbee, our old reading clerk, who was stricken with paralysis during the last Congress. I think gentlemen on the other side will remember the circumstances of the case and will make no objection to having this proposition included.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I hope it may be included. Judge Clisbee is now a physical wreck; he is dying at this time as a consequence of overwork which he did during the last Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the proposition, that it may go with this resolution as an amendment.

Mr. GEDDES. I object. There are half a dozen other amendments which gentlemen here desire to offer; and I have refused to admit any of them. I do not think this resolution ought to be lumbered down with amendments.

Mr. CALKINS. Let it go with the resolution and take whatever course the resolution may take.

Mr. GEDDES. It will do no good.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], as now reduced to writing, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the resolution be committed to the Committee on Accounts, and that the committee inquire and report to the House whether there were persons turned out of their positions at the close of the last session of Congress, and others put in their places who have performed no service.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the words "by the Doorkeeper" should be inserted after the words "turned out of their positions."

Mr. GIBSON. Let it stand as it is.

Mr. COBB. Do I understand that it is proposed to insert the words "by the Doorkeeper?"

The SPEAKER. The motion as read has not been changed.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. REAGAN, there were—ayes 118, noes 54.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not having voted in favor thereof.

So Mr. REAGAN'S motion to recommit with instructions was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN RESOLUTION.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of moving the correction of a clerical error in a resolution passed by the House just a moment ago, and it is to strike out the word "ensuing" and in lieu thereof to insert the words "current fiscal year." As it is, with the clerical error uncorrected, the resolution is now valueless.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Clerk will read the resolution as it will be when corrected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, the sum of $1,420, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the rental value of a building to be occupied by the folding department of the House and for the expense of transportation of public documents for the use of the House for the current fiscal year.

There was no objection, and the correction was made accordingly.

HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report back a substitute for the resolution submitted to them on yesterday and to move that the substitute be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report of the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred the following proposed amendment to Rule X, viz—

"1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, viz:

"On Elections, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Ways and Means, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Appropriations, to consist of fifteen members.
"On the Judiciary, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Banking and Currency, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Commerce, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Rivers and Harbors, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Agriculture, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Foreign Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Military Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Naval Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
"On the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to consist of thirteen members.
"On the Public Lands, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Indian Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
"On the Territories, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Railways and Canals, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Manufactures, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Mines and Mining, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Pacific Railroads, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Education and Labor, to consist of thirteen members.
"On the Militia, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Patents, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Invalid Pensions, to consist of fifteen members.
"On Pensions, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Claims, to consist of fifteen members.
"On War Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Private Land Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
"On the District of Columbia, to consist of thirteen members.
"On Revision of the Laws, to consist of thirteen members"—

Had the same under consideration, and report the following substitute therefor, viz.:

"The committees hereinafter named shall hereafter consist of thirteen members each, viz.: Banking and Currency, Foreign Affairs, Military Affairs, Territories, Public Buildings and Grounds, and on the District of Columbia.

"And the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads shall hereafter consist of fifteen members.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer as an amendment to that substitute the same amendment which I offered on yesterday, except that I increase the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the same number indicated by the Committee on Rules, that is, to fifteen members.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say for the information of the House that the report made by the Committee on Rules was reached after a careful and an elaborate consideration of the whole subject. They offer a proposition in lieu of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky yesterday [Mr. WILLIS], and which he now proposes as a substitute for this report. We say to the House it is the judgment of the Committee on Rules that in the report I have submitted we adopt very largely the proposed increase suggested by the gentleman's amendment, but that the substitute we propose is more carefully prepared and better answers the necessities of the machinery of the House than the one offered yesterday, and which, as I stated, the gentleman again submits to the vote of the House.

I am authorized to say to the House that the report of the Committee on Rules fully meets the views and wishes of the present Speaker of the House, and it has the indorsement of every other member of that committee. It makes an increase of forty-four positions on committees, exclusive of the seven created by the new Committee on Labor as established and determined by the House on yesterday.

Several MEMBERS. Forty-four memberships of committees?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; it is an increase of forty-four memberships of the committees of the House; that is, if it be adopted, there are to be forty-four additional committee memberships, exclusive of the seven which constitute the new Committee on Labor. The aggregate increase therefore would be fifty-one as proposed by the Committee on Rules, and that, in the judgment of every member of that committee, including the Speaker, is amply sufficient to provide for the efficient disposal of the business of the House.

I now ask, Mr. Speaker, for the previous question on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the previous question until I have had an opportunity to submit a few remarks on my proposition.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not withdraw the previous question, and yet I can not be wanting in courtesy to my colleague. He is only renewing the same amendment he debated at such length yesterday.

Mr. WILLIS. Upon yesterday, when the Committee on Rules presented its report reviving certain select committees, an amendment was offered and carried increasing the number of their membership. The total increase thus secured was ten. Subsequently, when the committee presented another report dividing the Committee on Education and Labor, I offered an amendment which left that committee unchanged in name and jurisdiction, but increased it and twenty-two other standing committees from eleven to thirteen members, thus securing forty-six additional positions on the standing committees. The amendment also created an additional standing committee on rivers and harbors of fifteen members, which it was understood had been determined upon by the committee.

At the request of my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN], who was in charge of the report of the committee, I withdrew the amendment, in order to give the Committee on Rules an opportunity to examine the proposed changes.

That opportunity the committee has had, and the result is now offered in this unanimous report. That report makes a large increase of committee positions, and though not as large as the amendment proposed, I would be disposed to ask no vote except for the fact that a number of gentlemen are in favor of the largest increase and have expressed a desire to vote upon the subject. Before asking a vote, however, I will modify the amendment by striking out that portion restoring the Committee on Education and Labor.

While I felt it my duty as a former member of that committee to oppose the proposed change as unnecessary, uncalled for, and without justification, and while I believe the division of the committee will injure the cause in whose behalf it is asked, I am not inclined to press the point. And in this connection I ought perhaps to assure my clever and impulsive friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that had I supposed for a single moment that the defeat of his proposed new committee of seven would imperil the safety of the country and precipitate a riot, either in Pittsburgh or elsewhere, I most certainly would never have uttered one word in opposition. My only desire was to accomplish the very object he doubtless had in view—the intelligent consideration and legislation upon the interests of the workingmen of our country. As that part of the amendment was of minor importance, and has been misunderstood and misconstrued, I now withdraw it, so that the only remaining question will be whether all these standing committees or only four-fifths of them shall be enlarged.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will my colleague agree to submit the question now to the House, as there are several other matters the committee desire to have considered?

Mr. WILLIS. I am warned by my colleague that time is very precious. I am warned also by my own knowledge of this subject that it presents a serious and important question to this House. And if I had any doubt about it, the able and unanswerable speech which lies before me, made by my friend and colleague at the opening of the last Congress, when these various committees were increased, some from eleven to fifteen, and some from eleven to thirteen, would promptly and effectually remove it. His argument, though strong then, would be doubly so now, when we have such a large increase of representation and decrease of committee places.

My amendment simply contemplates the increase of all twenty-three of these committees, now consisting of eleven members, to thirteen. It gives a few positions more than the report does, and secures uniformity in numbers; that is all. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask the previous question upon the report and pending amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencement of each Congress the following standing committees, viz:

On Elections, to consist of fifteen members.
On Ways and Means, to consist of thirteen members.
On Appropriations, to consist of fifteen members.
On the Judiciary, to consist of fifteen members.
On Banking and Currency, to consist of thirteen members.
On Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to consist of thirteen members.
On Commerce, to consist of fifteen members.
On Rivers and Harbors, to consist of fifteen members.
On Agriculture, to consist of fifteen members.
On Foreign Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On Military Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On Naval Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to consist of fifteen members.
On the Public Lands, to consist of thirteen members.
On Indian Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Territories, to consist of thirteen members.
On Railways and Canals, to consist of thirteen members.
On Manufactures, to consist of thirteen members.
On Mines and Mining, to consist of thirteen members.
On Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of thirteen members.
On Pacific Railroads, to consist of thirteen members.
On Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of thirteen members.
On Education, to consist of thirteen members.
On Labor, to consist of seven members.
On the Militia, to consist of thirteen members.
On Patents, to consist of thirteen members.
On Invalid Pensions, to consist of fifteen members.
On Pensions, to consist of thirteen members.
On Claims, to consist of fifteen members.
On War Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
On Private Land Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
On the District of Columbia, to consist of thirteen members.
On Revision of the Laws, to consist of thirteen members.

The question being taken, the House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Rules as a substitute for the original resolution committed to them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amended resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the report made by the Committee on Rules yesterday, which was undisposed of and went over on the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], in reference to the Committee on Commerce, and ask that the Clerk report the resolution as it comes from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following resolution, viz—

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows, namely:

"In Rule X, after the words 'on commerce, to consist of fifteen members,' add 'on rivers and harbors, to consist of fifteen members.'

"Amend paragraph 7 of Rule XI so as to read as follows:

"'To commerce, life-saving service, and light-houses, other than appropriations for life-saving service and light-houses, to the Committee on Commerce.'

"And insert next thereafter the following paragraph:

"'To the improvement of rivers and harbors, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills'"—

Having had the same under consideration, report it without amendment and recommend its adoption.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the members of the House for their attention for just a moment while I state what seems to me to be almost self-evident, that the passage of this resolution will simply degrade what has heretofore always been one of the prominent committees of this House since that committee has been organized. The result of this resolution will be to degrade the Committee on Commerce to a level with the most unimportant committee now organized in this House.

The Committee on Commerce has heretofore been supposed to act in relation to all questions that affect the great commercial interests of the country. On yesterday you took from that committee questions pertaining to ship-building and shipping and made a special committee upon that subject. Now comes this proposition to take from it also the river and harbor bill, thereby reducing its business to a simple matter of interstate commerce with perhaps now and then a light-house thrown in.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that that committee has had a large amount of work to do no one knows better than myself. But is that a reason why we should degrade the committee? Has it not heretofore been able to do its work and do it well? If you are going to make up the committees of this House upon the simple principle of relieving committees that are pressed with work with perhaps the additional object of furnishing a few new places for members as we were told yesterday to provide for the increased Democratic membership here in the House, why do you commence on the Committee on Commerce? Why select that committee?

I suggest with all due respect to the Committee on Rules that if they are going to divide up the work of the committees of this House which are now overworked, I will suggest the most overworked committee to-day is the Committee on Ways and Means; and I see no particular reason why we could not have two committees formed from that one; perhaps one on ways and one on means. [Laughter.] Such a change would relieve that committee of some of its enormous work. For fear that my statement may not be quite definite enough, let me inquire further how would it do to split the work of the Committee on Ways and Means into two parts, giving to one committee all the bills that tend to build up and strengthen our home industries, and to the other committee all the bills that tend to break down and destroy these home industries [laughter]; and thereby, as can be readily seen, you would be able to meet the views of both wings of our Democratic friends, as the two committees could be so arranged that they would fit each wing of said party? [Laughter.] Such an arrangement would not only facilitate the work of this House, but it might tend to harmony among the members of the party in the majority here, a result which lies so near the heart of many of us here. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Speaker, if you must divide committees, why not take the committee that my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] presided over with such distinction in the last Congress—the Judiciary Committee? I would propose a new committee, and I would have the new committee take charge of all legal questions. As many of us know, that would still leave the old Committee on the Judiciary with a burden of work that is perfectly enormous. [Laughter.] Those who are familiar with the work in this House will recollect with what generosity that committee always spread its protecting wings over every chicken hatched in this House or anywhere else on any and all subjects. [Laughter.]

Then, again, and this suggestion I would make for the benefit of the Speaker, why not divide up the Committee on Foreign Relations? I would give to the new committee, say, the Irish question, with the leave incidentally to act on all questions pertaining to the British lion. [Laughter.] If we could have the committee divided in that way we would have a committee—don't you see?—for an old and distinguished member of this House who has so long and on so many occasions given evidence of his sympathy for his Irish constituency. I do not mean my venerable friend in front of me [Mr. ROBINSON, of New York], but another gentleman from the same State, whom I do not see in his seat. We would also have a committee for a younger member of this House, who is also ambitious, whose service may not have been as long, though equally distinguished; and in that way we would relieve our Speaker from the embarrassments which I learn from the press are getting very troublesome.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to make a single statement?

Mr. HORR. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I wish to correct the gentleman from Michigan by saying that what I complain of, and what those who sympathize with me complain of, is not that we do not get proper attention for our Irish citizens, but that we have shamefully and disgracefully neglected our American citizens, and that there has not been here energy and patriotism enough to condemn that, thoroughly as it should have been done. [Applause.]

Mr. HORR. And that arises from the fact no doubt that our present Committee on Foreign Relations is so overworked and has such an enormous amount of business on its hands that it has not time to divide and dissect and separate these great national questions so as to enable them to reach great results. Besides, for a few days past the Irish question has so taken up the time of this House that the necessity of a new committee must be apparent to all. Now my proposition would relieve that committee; and as I said, it springs from the love I bear our excellent Speaker, with whom my relations have always been so kind and friendly, and hence it would give me great pleasure to suggest any plan that will relieve him in his arduous duties or aid him in consoling his many friends. But of course I throw out these suggestions without the hope that they will be adopted.

I might go on and show you that the Committee on Claims might be divided into four committees, and still each committee have more work than any one committee can possibly perform. The same is true of many other committees in this House.

Why, then, single out this one Committee on Commerce and undertake to shear it of all of its previous duties and all of its previous important work? What will be the result, Mr. Speaker, if you pass this resolution? You will degrade that important committee; and let me say to my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who up to this moment has always stood by the Committee on Commerce, that when I heard from his own lips that he was going to submit to this outrage on that committee I felt like exclaiming, Et tu, Brute! and then letting my great heart burst with grief. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I was asking what will be the result if we pass this resolution? You will degrade the Committee on Commerce until it will become nothing more than is to-day the Committee on Manufactures. You know, sir, that I refer to that Committee on Manufactures with a good deal of tender solicitude. It was my first love in this House. When that committee was first formed, seventy years ago, it was an important committee. How is it to-day? I had the honor during the Forty-sixth Congress to present to this House from that committee the only bill that had been before it, as I now remember, for eighteen years [laughter], but the Judiciary Committee, with the aid of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and with that appetite, that organized appetite of which I have spoken before, took that little bill from us, and the last that was ever seen of it was when it was hurrying out of this House on its way to nestle under the expanded wings and distended feathers of that Judiciary Committee. [Laughter.] One by one the duties of that committee were taken away, until for twenty years there has been nothing left of it but a high-sounding phrase. Would you thus emasculate the Committee on Commerce? I aver that you are doing exactly that thing in connection with the rule on shipping adopted yesterday.

For that reason I protest against taking a committee like the Committee on Commerce and stripping it of all its work. I am frank to say to my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that I do not believe he would submit to it here to-day were it not for some pet scheme which he has for the work of the Committee on Commerce, which is merely for a day; and that he is allowing his affection for that scheme to warp his judgment and turn him from the position he has heretofore occupied in this House, where he has ever been noted for defending a committee which he himself has honored so much by his distinguished services thereon.

I am aware that that gentleman will say, and it is true, that there is one great question left for the Committee on Commerce, the question of interstate commerce. Mr. Speaker, that is one of the greatest questions before the American people to-day. It is one of the questions which requires work and requires labor. But one question alone is not sufficient to break down a committee like the Committee on Commerce, and when that question is settled what is there left?

I say again that I protest against this proposition. It is done, perhaps, to obtain temporary relief, but it is not, as I believe, in the interest of good legislation, of legislation which the country will adopt and stand by in the future.

I have said all I care to say upon this question. I do hope that this House will hesitate long before it passes a resolution which utterly and totally destroys the dignity and character of one of the committees of this House which has heretofore been considered not only respectable but of great service to the country.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not a member of the Committee on Rules submitting this report, but I desire to say a word on this subject. I do not differ in opinion with my friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR] concerning the extent and character of the labors of the Committee on Commerce. While, as he says, I have always done my duty in defending the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, as given to it by the rules of the House, and while if the rules should remain the same as they now are I should continue to make the same defense of that committee, still I am of opinion that the good of the public service makes it proper to make the change now proposed in the rules.

It is not new with me to entertain this opinion. For four years past I have believed that the good of the public service required a division of the labors of the Committee on Commerce. The duty of examining the reports submitted, of hearing statements from persons, of considering the interests of commerce in the making up of the river and harbor bill, would make the labor of reporting and carrying through such a bill a full labor for one of the most industrious committees of this House. Those who have served on that committee and who have gone through that labor, as I have gone through it for eight successive years, know the immense labor of making up a river and harbor appropriation bill.

I the more favor this proposition because I favor the passage of bills to improve the navigation of the country, to cheapen commerce, to reduce the cost of insurance, to open markets, and promote the interest and welfare of the country. One of my reasons for favoring the report of the Committee on Rules is that I favor this policy and for this purpose.

Besides that, while I regret that a portion of the subjects-matter that it seems to me ought to have been left to the Committee on Commerce was taken away from that committee by the rule reported and adopted by the House yesterday, still the labors of that committee will be ample for any committee to keep it industriously employed with the river and harbor bill taken away from it.

It is not new to any member of the Committee on Commerce that for several years past that committee has not been able to give the consideration to general questions which they deserved, in consequence of the occupation of its time by the consideration and preparation of river and harbor bills.

I do not care to go into the discussion further than this. I simply desire to say that for the reasons I have stated, and for others which I might state, I think the public service would be benefited by adopting the division of the Committee on Commerce as proposed by the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied that everything that can be said in opposition to the pending report from the Committee on Rules has been said, and therefore I shall have but a word or two more to say.

The result of the report from the Committee on Rules now pending for adoption is simply to take from the Committee on Commerce its appropriation powers as to the rivers and harbors of this country. That is, the proposed new committee on rivers and harbors will take from the Committee on Commerce none of its jurisdiction, none of its powers, and will relieve it of none of its work, except the appropriation of what is known as the river and harbor bill. That will be the jurisdiction of the new committee, and to that extent the labors of the Committee on Commerce will be relieved and its jurisdiction will be abridged.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman explain to me what difference there would be between what is now proposed in reference to the Committee on Commerce and the taking from the Committee on Ways and Means all questions relating to the tariff?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I could see the application of the question, with that deference I am always pleased to show to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] I would be glad to answer him. But I can not see the analogy between the case stated by him and the proposition pending before the House.

I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Michigan say that the adoption of this report would leave the Committee on Commerce with nothing on earth to engage its attention except the question of interstate commerce.

Mr. HORR. And like questions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman mean to admit that the net product of twenty years of Republican administration and rule in the country has swept its commerce from the sea? Does the gentleman mean to admit that this country to-day has no commerce with foreign countries?

Mr. HORR. The House took that question from the Committee on Commerce yesterday.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If he does say so I am not going to controvert it, because it has been reduced to too small a matter to quarrel over.

But then I say the shipping question has not been taken from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HORR. I thought it had.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The ship-building and ship-owning interest of this country has by the action of this House been put into the hands of a special committee, and every one will concede that this interest is in such a condition as to need the fostering care of a special committee.

Mr. REAGAN. And the rules provide for the reference to it of questions relating to the decadence of American commerce.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the effect of the pending proposition. There is nothing more in it; it is easily stated and easily comprehended. It is for this House to say whether or not the Committee on Rules have acted wisely in the recommendation that there shall be a permanent standing committee of the House that shall have charge of the appropriations for rivers and harbors, and shall have the same powers and rights in making its report of those appropriations that the Committee on Appropriations has on general appropriation bills.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Kentucky inform us whether this resolution will leave to the Committee on Commerce the appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It will not. The appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors will, if this report be adopted, go to the new committee, and that is the only power, the only jurisdiction, it will have.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The adoption, then, of this proposition will carry the improvements of the Mississippi River to the new committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; to the new committee, which will be known as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield for a few moments? I desire to offer, with the leave of the acting chairman of the committee, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 21 of Rule XI so that it will read as follows, namely:

"To the levees and improvements of the Mississippi River, to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River; and the Committee on the Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River shall have the same privileges in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvements of the Mississippi River as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills."

Mr. SPRINGER. With the leave of the gentleman from Kentucky I desire to make a few remarks in favor of my amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. How much time does he require?

Mr. SPRINGER. About five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Go ahead.

Mr. SPRINGER. This question of the improvement of the Mississippi River is now placed in the hands of a commission specially authorized for the purpose by Congress. That commission is carrying on a work in pursuance of authority granted by Congress for that purpose; therefore this matter is taken out of the ordinary improvements for rivers and harbors of the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend a moment. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Kentucky yielded for the purpose of allowing the amendment to be offered or merely for remarks?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That was the only purpose for which I understood I yielded; I did not want to be lacking in courtesy when the gentleman wanted to be heard a minute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yielded to have the amendment read; I did not yield to have it put to the House. I have no objection to the gentleman being heard, but I did not yield to have the amendment come in and be voted on.

Mr. DUNN. For the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois I wish to state that this amendment is not germane to the resolution pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. DUNN. The resolution pending affects the jurisdiction of the new committee alone; this amendment relates to the jurisdiction of a different committee altogether.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the new committee will take control of this subject unless we adopt the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am reminded—it had escaped my memory—that one of the members of the Committee on Rules reserved the right to offer, either in person or through another member, this amendment. Hence I now yield to allow it to be offered for a vote.

Mr. BELFORD. Let the amendment be again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be read for the information of members.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If that be adopted the phraseology of the original resolution will have to be changed.

Mr. SPRINGER. This amendment will simply give to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River the same right to report appropriations for the improvement of that river that is proposed to be given to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors generally in regard to all other streams of the country. The reason why this committee should have this special jurisdiction is found in the fact that this river has been given a special place in the legislation of Congress through the appointment of a commission by the President for the consideration of this work. The improvement of this river is different from the ordinary improvements of this character, for it relates to a great stream which is the highway of all the country, and therefore ought to be specially regarded in making appropriations of this kind.

If this improvement is to be dragged into the ordinary river and harbor bill it will be there for the purpose of being used as a kind of pack-mule to carry appropriations for all the small streams of the country. In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the Mississippi River is entitled to stand upon its own merits. It ought to be dealt with by this House as a great national highway, and it ought to receive all that special consideration which this Congress can give it.

Let us recognize the great importance of this stream. Its improvement is now committed to a special commission for the purpose of devising the best means of dealing with it and of recommending necessary appropriations therefor. I am in favor of annual appropriations being made to such an extent at least that every freshet that comes in the spring shall not wash away the work done during the previous season. We must act in this matter in earnest if we mean that this great highway shall be properly and speedily improved, as it ought to be. We should appropriate at each Congress the largest sums that can be economically expended until the whole improvement as contemplated by the commission is completed. No matter what may be the cost, it will be economy to complete the work at the earliest time practicable. The necessary appropriations for this purpose can best be considered and recommended by a committee especially charged with the subject.

Mr. MILLS. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois whether there should not be appropriations for the improvement of the harbors upon the seacoast, as well as for the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly; but we already have a special committee for that purpose. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will take care of the improvement of the harbors of the country as well as of the rivers other than the Mississippi.

Mr. MILLS. But should not the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River go with them?

Mr. SPRINGER. This river is entitled to have, as we have already given it, a special commission for the purpose of looking after its improvement. It is entitled, in my judgment, in this House to a special committee to see that the appropriations required by the Mississippi River Commission are ordered by Congress.

Mr. HORR rose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will yield now for a few moments to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HORR. I only want a moment, Mr. Speaker. This amendment simply illustrates the position taken by me on the original resolution. You no sooner get the Committee on Commerce split in two, and get two committees, than in comes a proposition to resplit one of the split committees. [Laughter.] When and where is this dividing business to stop? The proposition to reduce and degrade one of the old committees is no sooner made than the process goes on to degrade new committees.

Now, I wish to say to the friends of improvements of rivers and harbors in this House that the object of this amendment, in my candid judgment, will be the death of the Mississippi River and its improvements. And when I say it, I know you gentlemen on this side of the House will bear me witness that heretofore my labors have been in behalf of that great stream and its tributaries. One committee should control all the rivers and harbors of this great country, and if you are determined to take that from the Committee on Commerce, you make a still worse mistake if you then divide the River and Harbor Committee and give these subjects to separate committees. There is no end of the divisions which must follow, and I am absolutely certain it will work ruin to a great extent to the improvements of rivers and harbors in this country.

This is the same question we have had in both Congresses since I have been here. Both the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses voted it down by a very large majority, as they ought to have done, and I hope the Forty-eighth Congress will do the same thing.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I assure the gentleman that not fewer than twenty members are asking to be heard.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the gentleman will give me a little time on this important question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It seems to me it is sufficiently well understood. If I knew what the wish of the House is I would act in accordance with it. [Cries of "Vote!"] It will take all day in this debate if we go on as we have done; and therefore I must insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the demand for the previous question will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask for the previous question on the report and amendment or on the amendment alone?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the report and amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 137.

Mr. CALKINS. I withdraw the demand for a division of the House, and will only say one word.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to debate unless we all can be heard.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question first recurred on agreeing to Mr. SPRINGER'S amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The report of the Committee on Rules was then adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the Committee on Rules was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that there will be now no objection to the proposition I made in the early part of the day, that the States and Territories may be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions as of Mondays.

Mr. DUNN. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to have another amendment offered, a mere verbal amendment, to change the phraseology of one of the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; but I should like to have the consent of the House to this proposition, that after the business of the Committee on Rules is disposed of this call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills may be had.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

COMMITTEE ON LEVEES AND IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. DUNN. I now ask consent to offer an amendment to Rule XI, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 21 of Rule XI so that it will read as follows:

"To the levees and improvements of the Mississippi River: To the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River."

Mr. KEIFER. That, I think, had better go over.

Mr. DUNN. Let me explain the purport of the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the proposition?

Mr. KEIFER. I will withdraw my objection for the purpose of hearing what the gentleman has to say, reserving the right to renew it.

Mr. DUNN. This is really not a gravely material amendment. The Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River bears that name, but its jurisdiction is limited and is not as large as its name implies. It has jurisdiction only of subjects relating to the levees of the river. It has never had, and has not now, jurisdiction of anything excepting subjects pertaining to the levees of the Mississippi River.

There is no measure before Congress relating to levees alone; and the jurisdiction of the committee ought to be made as wide as its name implies, by adding the word "improvements." That is all there is in the amendment. It ought to be adopted to make the rule consistent with itself.

Mr. KEIFER. If that is the full scope of the proposed amendment I believe I will not make any objection. I think it is a proper one.

Mr. DUNN. It simply gives jurisdiction of levees and improvements to the committee, which is now limited to legislation concerning levees alone.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think this had better go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not object.

Mr. BLOUNT. This matter should be acted upon by the committee

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the matter must go over.

Mr. KEIFER. If it goes over I think it had better be committed to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Arkansas any preference in the matter?

Mr. DUNN. I will ask then, if the gentleman from Georgia insists upon his objection, that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred.

COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KEIFER. On yesterday I offered, as instructed by the Committee on Rules, a resolution for the appointment of a new committee. I should like to have the Clerk report the proposed resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of nine members be appointed, to whom shall be referred all petitions, bills, and resolves asking for the extension of suffrage to women or the removal of their legal disabilities.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire, myself, to discuss the subject, unless some other gentleman wishes to be heard. If so, I shall yield such time as may be desired, as I do not propose to consume any time myself except in reply to what may be said by others upon the subject. If the gentleman from Illinois desires five minutes, I will yield to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I desire to withdraw the objection I made to the consideration of this resolution on yesterday evening, and also the other objection, so that it may come up on its merits.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the subject?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at present; I may wish to be heard after a time.

Mr. KEIFER. If there is no disposition to debate the resolution, I am sure I have no wish to discuss it.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will consent to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas not exceeding ten minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if the framers of the Constitution of the United States, the men who organized the Government of the United States, those who conducted its administration and its law-making department for the first fifty years of its existence, could happen to be here now and see and hear the proposition submitted by the Committee on Rules or by the gentleman from Ohio, as the case may be, to create a committee to consider the subject of woman suffrage, or if they could have been here on yesterday and heard the House discussing the subject of the creation of the committee on alcoholic liquor traffic, the probability is that the first inquiry raised in their minds would be, have the people of the United States lost the Constitution that we made for them?

Now, sir, suppose we adopt that rule and create that committee, is there one gentleman in this House who will say that the House can pass a bill upon the subject that any court can enforce, or that every court in the land would not consider unconstitutional?

Then, sir, we propose to take up a subject to amuse ourselves with because there is a clamor of a certain portion, and perhaps a very respectable portion, of the people for it. I hope that it will not be considered ungracious in me that I oppose the wish of any lady. But when she so far misunderstands her duty as to want to go to working on the roads and making rails and serving in the militia and going into the army, I want to protect her against it. I do not think that sort of employment suits her sex or her physical strength.

I think also, when we attempt to overturn the social status of the world as it has existed for six thousand years, we ought to begin somewhere where we have a constitutional basis to stand upon. We had better go to the States, which have a right to regulate the interests of society within their borders, and see what they wish to do about this. In relation to the question of suffrage, all who have read the Constitution or the comments upon it know that the framers of it provided nowhere that the power to regulate suffrage rested in the Congress of the United States, but in providing for the election of members of this body, the election of the members of the popular branch of Congress, they provided that they should be elected by electors of the several States as authorized to vote by the several States. If Congress can not authorize men to vote, will we extend courtesy so far as to repeal the Constitution and say we can authorize women to vote?

I only rose, sir, for the purpose of making very briefly a protest against kicking about the poor old Constitution that has been so long forgotten. If it is no longer a binding instrument here, let it rest in peace and cease to kick it around in the dirt. And I would have said this with reference to the rule we provided yesterday if I had felt it was necessary to say anything. But I suppose whoever clamors for action here finds a warrant for it in the clamor outside, and it is not necessary to look to the Constitution for it; it is not necessary to regard the interests of civilization and the experience of ages in determining our social as well as our political policy; but we will arrange it so that there shall be no one to nurse the babies, no one to superintend the household, but all shall go into the political scramble, and we shall go back as rapidly as we can march into barbarism. That is the effect of such doings as this, disregarding the social interests of society for a clamor that ought never to have been made.

Mr. Speaker, I had no intention to speak on this subject to-day, and am not prepared to discuss it as it ought to be discussed. As I have said, I only rose to make my protest against this disregard of the Constitution.

Mr. WOLFORD. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that a law regulating the importation and selling of liquor is unconstitutional?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not said that. That is a revenue measure. That is not the matter I was talking about.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD.]

Mr. BELFORD. I have no doubt that this House will be gratified with the profound respect which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has expressed for the Constitution of the country. The last distinguished act with which he was connected was its attempted overthrow; and a man who was engaged in an enterprise of that kind can fight a class to whom his mother belonged.

I desire to know whether a woman is a citizen of the United States or an outcast without any political rights whatever. The gentleman informs us that this resolution is not within the purview and scope of the constitutional power of Congress. I say it is perfectly competent for the Congress of the United States to pass a bill, by way of a constitutional amendment at least, to prohibit the States of this Union from depriving women, our mothers and wives and sisters, of participation in its government. If we had more of female influence in the political arrangement of this country, I think even the morals of this House of Representatives might be improved.

What is the proposition presented by the gentleman from Ohio? That we will constitute a committee to whom shall be referred all petitions presented by the women of this country. Is not the right of petition a constitutional right? Has not woman in this country at least risen above the rim and horizon of servitude, discredit, and disgrace, and has she not a right, representing as she does in many instances great questions of property, to present her appeals to the national council and have them wisely and judiciously considered? I think it is due to our wives, daughters, mothers, and sisters to afford them an avenue through which they can legitimately and judicially reach the ear of this great nation.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio on the left [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire time to refer only to the remark of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] respecting the committee organized yesterday. I take it nobody claims that Congress has a right to legislate on the question of the traffic in alcoholic liquors in the States; but over the interstate traffic in alcoholic liquors the Government of the United States has sole jurisdiction. We shall probably hear from the gentleman from Texas at no distant day claiming the right of Congress to inquire into the interstate traffic or traffic of everything else, and why not alcoholic liquors? This is a product from which we raise something like $50,000,000 by taxes annually. Is it not competent then for a committee of this House to inquire into that traffic? In my judgment it is, and it is no infringement whatever of the Constitution of the United States. I did not rise to discuss the questions involved in the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Ohio, but simply to say what I have said in reply to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire to take more than a minute or two of time in advocating the adoption of this resolution unless other gentlemen desire to speak. On yesterday, when the resolution was offered, I complied fully I believe with my instructions as given by the Committee on Rules, when I stated that I was not authorized to say to the House that this resolution expressed the judgment and views of that committee. But I do not wish the statement to go any further than that. I do not understand that the committee was specially opposed to the resolution. but it rather felt, in view of its importance, that it ought to be brought before the House and the House left to pass upon it.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who is always fair and always candid, has hardly reviewed the whole scope of this resolution, or he would not have gone so far as to say that a committee constituted under it could report nothing to the House that would be constitutional. Even if we should agree, as we do not, wholly to his notions on the subject of State rights, it would be proper to say that we still hold within the sovereignty of the Government of the United States, specially given by the Constitution, the right to legislate for the District of Columbia. Nay, more, we have the right to legislate for all of the Territories, organized and unorganized, of this country.

Does the gentleman assert that we could not constitutionally pass a law affecting the rights and liberties of women, determining and defining their citizenship, &c., in the District of Columbia and in the Territories belonging to the United States? I suppose the gentleman would make that exception.

Mr. REAGAN. It merely occurs to me that as the men of the District of Columbia are not permitted to vote, probably they want the women to vote.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman avoids the question by saying that we do not give to the men of this District the right to vote. We have done so in years gone by, and then we repealed that law. We have the power to again authorize them to vote, and also the constitutional power to enfranchise the women of the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will admit that I made my statement too broad. I do not mean to deny the right of Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia and for the Territories. But the resolution as introduced is general and is not limited to them; it is general and applies to everything.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well. We have gotten rid of the serious objection made to the adoption of the resolution, to wit, that there was nothing that could be done by that committee that would be constitutional. We find it now admitted and conceded that this committee could consider rightfully all petitions and memorials that might come before it relating to the rights of women in the District of Columbia and in all the Territories of the United States.

It is proper to say that by a reservation put in every charter act of an organized Territory we hold the right to annul all of the Territorial laws. In fact they are supposed to be approved by Congress as fast as they are passed by the Territorial Legislatures. All the charters of the Territories require them to send their laws here for our approval, and we may disapprove and thus annul them.

And we must remember, Mr. Speaker, that we stand here committed in a large sense to the matter of woman suffrage. In the Territory of Wyoming and in the Territory of Utah, for fifteen years past, women have had the right to vote on all questions that men can vote upon; and the Congress of the United States has stood by without disapproving those legislative acts of those Territories.

Mr. REAGAN. I have answered the question of my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] as to jurisdiction. Now, if it would not interrupt the line of his argument, I would like to ask him if he would assume that under the general terms of this resolution Congress could pass any act on this subject which would extend into a State?

Mr. KEIFER. I will come to that question, but I would rather not undertake to state everything in one sentence.

I was stating that we to-day stand committed by our negative action, and have so stood for fifteen years, in favor of woman suffrage in the Territories of the United States. And we now have before us a law passed at the last session of the Legislature of the Territory of Washington giving to the women of that Territory the right to vote. We have not passed upon the question one way or the other, but we have the right to pass upon it. This I think seems to dispose sufficiently of the question of constitutional legislative power without trampling upon the toes of any State-rights man.

The right of petition belongs to all persons within the limits of our Republic, and with the right of petition goes the right on the part of the Congress of the United States through constitutional means to grant relief.

If it be true, as gentlemen assume, that there is no constitutional power to pass a law that will grant to women rights and privileges which we may think should belong to them, then we have the right under the Constitution to propose amendments to the Constitution so as to enfranchise the women of this country. For that reason we might have a committee to consider the question, and it would not be unconstitutional for that committee to report an amendment to the Constitution so as to give to women the right to vote. Do gentlemen claim it is unconstitutional to amend the Constitution?

I know that claim was made at one time on the floor of this House and on the floor of the Senate. When it was proposed to abolish slavery in the United States, distinguished gentlemen argued that it was unconstitutional to amend the Constitution so as to abolish slavery. But all that has passed away, and we now find ourselves in the light of the present, seeing clearly that we may amend the Constitution in any way we please, pursuing always the proper constitutional methods of doing so.

There are considerations due to the women of this country which ought not to be lightly thrust aside. For thirty-five years they have been petitioning and holding conventions and demanding that certain relief should be granted them, to the extent of allowing them to exercise the right of suffrage. It is true they are not united upon that subject.

But in that thirty-five years we have seen great things accomplished. We have seen some of the subtleties of the common law that were spread over this country swept away. There is hardly anybody anywhere who now adheres to the doctrine that a married woman can not make a contract, and that she has no rights or liabilities except those that are centered in her husband. Even the old common-law maxim that "husband and wife are one, and that one the husband," has been largely modified under the influence of these ladies, these patriotic, earnest ladies, who have taken hold of this question and enlightened the world upon it.

There are now in the vaults and rooms about here hundreds of thousands of petitions for relief, sent in here by women and by those who believe that they ought to have certain rights and privileges of citizenship granted to them. For fifteen years there has been regularly held in this city annually a convention composed of representative ladies from all parts of the country. These conventions, as well as various State and local conventions, have been appealing for relief; and they ought not to be met by the statement that we will not even give them the poor privilege of having a committee to whom their petitions and memorials may be referred.

We have made some progress. In 1871 there was a very strong minority report made in this House in favor of woman suffrage. Notwithstanding the notion that we must stand by all our old ideas, the Supreme Court of the United States, after deliberately considering the question, admitted a woman to practice at the bar of that court. A hundred years ago, in the darkness of which some gentlemen desire still to live, I suppose they would not have done this. But there has been a great deal of progress in various ways. Favorable reports on this subject were made in the last Congress from a committee of the Senate and a committee of the House, although there was no favorable action by either branch of Congress. The Senate of the United States in the present Congress has already appointed a committee on the subject of woman suffrage. The Legislatures of many of the States have taken hold of the subject and expressed their judgment on the matter. There has been a great deal of progress in that direction. The Senate and the House of Representatives of the last (Forty-seventh) Congress each provided a suitable committee to whom all matters relating to woman suffrage could be referred. Will this House take a step backward on this question?

I want especially to notify the gentleman from Texas that we are not standing still on this question. We are moving in the light of the age or civilization in which we live; and for one I expect the next generation of people will be better and wiser than the present, and that they will see things more clearly than we do now. I believe in progress in civilization and, if you please, in all other things, especially in politics. Eleven States—New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, New York, Michigan, Kentucky, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, and Oregon—have authorized women to vote for school trustees and members of school boards. I am just informed that Pennsylvania has done the same. This would make twelve States. I always desire to be accurate when making a statement, and therefore when I say that Kentucky has authorized women to vote for members of school boards I must say that this right has been somewhat limited; but it concedes the principle. Kentucky only extends this right to widows who have children and pay taxes. But the principle is the same. This action shows that there is progress on this subject in Kentucky as well as in many of the other States. Women are nominated and voted for not only in the twelve States and three Territories I have named, but in nearly all the Northern and Western States. Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Iowa have a large number of women who are county superintendents of public schools. And let me say, for the benefit of the Democratic party, that in the great progressive Western State of Kansas the Democracy have risen so high as to nominate and vote for a woman for State superintendent of public schools. This they did at the last election. So there has been a little growing away from those old ideas and notions even among the Democracy. In the progressive State of Kansas, in the county of Harper, there was recently elected—I do not know how many Democrats assisted in the election—a woman to fill the office of county clerk. Thus we are permitting women to fill public offices. Why should they not participate in the election of officers who are to govern them?

We require them to pay taxes; there are a great many burdens imposed upon them, and shall we not allow them the poor privilege of having a committee to whom their petitions and their prayers may be sent? Kansas, Michigan, Colorado, and Nebraska have in recent years submitted the question of woman suffrage to a vote of the people, and more than one-third of the people of each of these States have voted in favor of that proposition. Oregon has now a similar proposition pending before her people.

As I have referred to the matter of taxation, let me say that by the laws of all the States women are required to pay taxes; but we are practically working on the theory that these women are to be taxed without the right of representation. Taxation without representation led to the separation of the colonies from the mother country. The colonies were not so much opposed to being taxed as they were to being taxed without representation. The old patriots of that day conceived the idea that there was a principle somewhere involved in the right of representation. So they evolved and formulated that Revolutionary maxim, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." The basis of that maxim was that they would not give to the payment of taxes without the right of representation. Revolution and war made representation and taxation correlative. But the States tax all women on their property. For illustration, 8,000 women of Boston and 34,000 in the State of Massachusetts pay $2,000,000 of taxes; one-eleventh of the entire tax of that great and wealthy State. The same ratio of taxation will be found to prevail in all the other States.

And, Mr. Speaker, progress has gone on elsewhere than in the United States. England has been moving forward in this matter, and we should not stand behind her in anything. Since 1870 all women who are householders have had the right throughout all England to vote on all school questions, and by a very close vote in England at the last session of Parliament a resolution was rejected in the House of Commons extending to women the full right to a parliamentary vote. The resolution was lost by only nine votes, I believe. Under the poor laws of that country women hold office.

Canada, too, has been moving forward in this matter. Her Parliament has been agitating the question; and by a very close vote the matter passed over in the last session of the Parliament of the Province of Canada. So, about us, progress goes on. There is one little spot on the face of the globe, one little isle tributary to that great civilized nation England, that gives to woman the full right to vote with men, and that is the Isle of Man. Singular that the name should be so connected with this advanced step in civilization. But that isle, small as it is, has set an example to the world on this subject. And we are going to follow it some of these days. It may be when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and your humble servant have passed away, but it will be in better days than now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have offered these suggestions because I believe one-half of the population of the United States should not be cut off from the poor privilege of having a home for the petitions and memorials which may be sent up here in accordance with the Constitution of the country.

Unless there be some special reason for extending the debate I shall now demand the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to offer an amendment and to say a word in response to what has fallen from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not authorized by the Committee on Rules to permit an amendment to be offered. I am acting under limited instructions of the Committee on Rules. I will yield, however, to the gentleman from Texas for a few minutes if he wishes to be heard, but I can not permit his amendment to be offered.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state, then, what my amendment would have been if the gentleman had permitted me to offer it. I would have moved to add to the end of the resolution the words "in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia," in order to limit the resolution to what Congress might do, and not leave it general, to cover what the gentleman substantially confesses Congress has not the power to do, and that is to make laws in reference to the right of suffrage which would extend to the States.

Now the gentleman from Ohio has set himself up as the champion of the rights of the ladies of this country, but I am sure he does not have a more profound respect for them than I do. And what I have said already has been said because I have too much respect for them to see them taken out of their true sphere of action and placed where the God of nature and the common judgment of mankind never intended they should be.

Mr. KEIFER. I have been willing to be indulgent and to allow debate on this subject, and now I wish only to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that I suppose he has now expressed what really is his objection to this resolution. I am one of those, however, who do not believe that to give to women common rights and privileges will degrade them, but on the contrary I believe it will ennoble them; and I believe further that to put them upon an equality in the matter of rights and privileges with men will enhance their charms and not lessen their beauty. I now insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELFORD demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 124, not voting 112; as follows:

So the resolution was not agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. VALENTINE until further notice.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. MILLARD with Mr. POST.

Mr. HARDEMAN with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. HATCH of Michigan.

Mr. PAYNE with Mr. TURNER of Georgia.

Mr. RAY, of New York, with Mr. OATES.

Mr. HORR with Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. PEELLE, of Indiana, with Mr. LE FEVRE.

Mr. HORR. I desire to state that I was paired on political questions with Governor CURTIN, of Pennsylvania; but not looking upon this as such a question, I have voted.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to dispense with the recapitulation of the names.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the recapitulation of the names be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

WASHINGTON'S RESIGNATION OF HIS COMMISSION.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from a select committee; and in view of the fact that unless the subject-matter is acted upon now the resolution will fail for want of time, I ask the consideration of the resolution immediately.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee to which was referred joint resolution No. 65 report the same back with amendments.

Your committee believe that the subject of the resolution commends itself to every patriotic citizen as commemorative of the most signal example in history of the subordination of personal ambition to the rights and liberties of the people, and therefore recommend the adoption of said resolution in the form herewith submitted:

Whereas on the 23d day of December, 1783, at the city of Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, George Washington surrendered his commission as the commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America; and

Whereas that act of patriotic devotion to the principles of the Revolution, the success of which established the independence of the Colonies and secured the liberties of the people of the United States, is deserving of special recognition upon the centennial return of the memorable event:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to issue a proclamation, recommending the people either by appropriate exercises in connection with the religious services of the 23d instant, or by such public observances as they may deem proper on Monday, the 24th instant, to commemorate this signal event in American liberty.

2. That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to order the national salute to be fired from the various forts throughout the country on Monday, December 24, 1883.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken upon the adoption of the amendments proposed by the special committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOBLITZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIRECTORS OF COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania as directors of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, under the act of June 10, 1872.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that when the Hourse adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Monday next.

The question being taken, the House divided; and there were—ayes 139, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. REED. A single question before that motion is submitted. It is understood on this side of the House that there is to be no business transacted on Monday morning except the announcement of committees.

Mr. MORRISON. I so understand it.

Mr. REED. Then that is the understanding on both sides.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONVERSE rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has moved that the House do now adjourn. Before submitting that motion the Chair desires unanimous consent to lay before the House certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Attorney-General, inclosing a letter from Judge C. C. Parker, United States judge, relative to the necessity for the erection of a new courthouse at Fort Smith, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the sixth number of the Statistical Abstract of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Montana, relative to the boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY FOR 1883.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for 1883; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CLOTHING DESTROYED BY FIRE AT FORT BROWN, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, with accompanying papers, recommending the gratuitous issue of clothing to certain enlisted men of Company D, Nineteenth Infantry, to cover the loss caused by the fire at Fort Brown, Texas, November 20, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAYBURY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOCKERY, until January 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUSEMAN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARDEMAN, until after the holiday recess.

To Mr. WINANS, of Michigan, until after the holidays.

To Mr. STRUBLE, until after the holiday recess, on account of important business.

To Mr. YAPLE, until after the holidays.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BARBOUR asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Richard Heater, executor of John Heater, of Loudoun County, Virginia; no adverse report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw that motion.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HENLEY. I am instructed by the delegation from the Pacific coast, representing three States and two Territories, to ask leave to introduce at the present time the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to the Chinese," approved May 6, 1882.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not received.

LABORERS IN CLOAK-ROOM.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund to Alexander B. Thomas and Wilson Grice $60 a month each for services rendered from March 4, 1883, to December 3, 1883, as per resolution of the House passed March 3, 1883.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that resolution should go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MATSON. I ask one minute to explain the resolution. The two persons named in it are employés in the cloak-rooms of the House, one on each side of this Chamber.

A resolution was passed on the last day of the last Congress providing for their employment at the rate of $60 per month. By some inadvertence of the Committee on Accounts, which reported the resolution, the fund out of which those two employés were to be paid was not named. This resolution is intended simply for the purpose of providing the manner of their payment, so that they may be paid. They have served for nine months without any pay at all.

Several MEMBERS. The resolution is right.

Mr. MATSON. They are colored men, and should have the money for Christmas.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, considered, and adopted.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to withdraw my objection to the introduction of the bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the bill, the title of which has been read?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I object, unless we can all have the same privilege.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I renew the motion that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELFORD: The petition of Wolff & Brown, for compensation for certain property taken by United States officers during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CANNON: The petition of Thomas J. Bowman and others, relative to the application for the relief of Harrison Shannon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Paper relating to an appropriation to continue the improvement of Coosa River in Georgia and Alabama—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COSGROVE: The joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Missouri, relative to the tax on tobacco—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. W. W. CULBERTSON: The petition of the Fourth Kentucky Regimental Association, indorsed by resolutions of Craxton, Rousseau, and McPherson Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic in the Department of Kentucky, relative to pensions, &c.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Charles S. Worthington, signed by many others, citizens of Kentucky, praying that a pension be granted the said C. S. Worthington—to the same committee.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of Corydon Millard, late chaplain of the Fourth United States Heavy Artillery, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. DIBRELL: The petition of P. R. Dabney, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. DUNCAN: The petition of dealers in tobacco, cigars, &c., of Carlisle, Pa., for special appropriation to pay rebate of taxes under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Major Jenkins's Post, No. 99, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, for increase of pension of Jacob J. Montgomery, late of Seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNHAM: The petition of Philip D. Armour, Charles L. Hutchinson, John A. Jameson, and others, asking that a pension be granted to Mrs. Susan B. La Monte—to the same committee.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 24, 1883.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce that he has heretofore signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant. The announcement was not made at the time because the Senate was not in session. The Chair saw no objection, under the Constitution or laws, to his signing the joint resolution, which had been duly enrolled; and he now announced the fact.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I believe there was a general understanding that no legislative business should be transacted to-day, but there may be some executive business that can be attended to; and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was understood that there was to be no business done except by unanimous consent. That was expressly set forth. There is some formal business that may as well be disposed of now as at any time—the presentation of petitions, bills, and the like.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion and let some informal business be transacted.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial of merchants, manufacturers, and business men of Saint Louis, Mo., remonstrating against any effort to repeal what is known as the vaporizing law of 1879, which permits vinegar-makers to produce low wines for the purpose of making vinegar without the payment of the United States tax. They state that they believe the law is good and beneficent, and ought to remain in force. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present certain vouchers and evidence in regard to the bill (S. 367) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack, introduced at this session of Congress. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to accompany that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I present the answer of Judge E. B. Turner, of the western district of Texas, to the memorial of A. J. Evans, district attorney of the same district, which was presented by me some days ago, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I move that this reply be referred to the same committee, to be considered in connection with the memorial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON presented a petition of the members of the bar of the parishes of Saint Mary's and Iberia, Louisiana, praying for an amendment of the act approved March 3, 1881, so that those parishes shall be embraced within the limits of the western judicial district of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 869) to vacate an alley in square 234 in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 870) for the relief of R. G. Combs and others; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 871) to restore Charles H. Campbell to the rank of captain in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 872) for the relief of William R. Testerman; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I introduce that bill in lieu of one previously introduced. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, to be considered instead of the other bill, in which there was a blank. This is filled up.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 873) for the relief of William G. Ford, of Memphis, Tenn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the pension claim of E. Jacobs be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, subject to the rules of the Senate.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of E. Jacobs be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion of Mr. LAMAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the claim of Lewis D. Allen be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of William H. Manning be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, of California, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of E. J. Baldwin be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

COAST-SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of Julius E. Hilgard, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1883, for distribution by said Superintendent.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CORRECTION OF A BILL.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent for the correction of a clerical error in the bill (S. 298) for the relief of Mrs. Maggie Cassidy, reported from the Committee on Patents on Thursday last, in which the amount was omitted by mistake. The report shows the amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator wishes that the blank in the bill be filled by the sum mentioned in the report of the committee. Is there objection to this request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears no objection, and the blank in the bill will be filled with the sum mentioned in the report.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 9 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 24, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of Thursday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I beg to make an inquiry of the Chair. Having been absent at the time the order was adopted touching the course of business to-day, I wish to inquire whether it is in order, in view of the understanding agreed to, to submit bills for reference.

The SPEAKER. While there is nothing in the order of the House itself upon this subject, the Chair will state that when the motion was made that the House adjourn over until to-day it was announced as the understanding upon the floor that no business would be transacted at this meeting except the announcement of the committees.

Mr. KASSON. Would the reference of bills be considered business under such an order?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would be.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. Would permission by unanimous consent to change the reference of a bill be a violation of the understanding?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be the transaction of business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America.

PATRICK O'DONNELL.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House the message just received from the President of the United States, which is very brief; and it will be read; but no order with regard to its reference will be made unless gentlemen on the floor think that would not be in violation of the understanding.

Mr. RANDALL. The rule requires that messages of this kind from the President shall be immediately read. Hence I think the Chair exercises a wise discretion in this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

The House of Representatives having adopted on the 19th instant a resolution in the following words—

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of this House, without delay, if not incompatible with the public service, all communications, documents, and papers in his possession relating to the trial, conviction, and execution of the late Patrick O'Donnell by the British Government—

I transmit herewith a report made to me by the Secretary of State, with the papers enumerated in the subjoined list, as answering said resolution.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, December 24, 1883.

The SPEAKER. Unless it be the disposition of the House to take some other course, this message, with the accompanying documents, will lie on the Speaker's table for action hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. A motion will be made when the House next meets to have these papers printed. This is a matter of the highest importance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes the papers will be printed and referred.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Speaker, in pursuance of the concurrent resolution adopted by the two Houses, declared the House adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1884, at 12 o'clock m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLEMENTS: The petition of citizens of Floyd County, Georgia, praying that the tax on alcohol be removed—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of T. M. Vanderhoof, post commander of A. Lincoln Post, No. 3, of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for a pension for Rev. Corydon Millard, late chaplain Fourth United States Heavy Artillery—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: The petition of J. S. Gilliam and 10 others, letter-carriers of Dubuque, Iowa, praying legislation granting those employed in the free-delivery service a thirty days' leave of absence each year, with pay—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the resolutions adopted by John J. Stillman Post, No. 194, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, asking Congress to grant a pension at the rate of $8 per month to each soldier who served thirty days in the Union Army and was once under fire—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth Becton, of Willis Ferrill, of Mary E. Lucas, heir of Mary G. Wray, and of E. P. McNeal—severally to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 7, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 24, 1883, was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers and copies of reports from officers in charge of river and harbor districts of the results of preliminary examinations made in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of December 13, 1883, three printed briefs filed by Charles H. Tweed, counsel of the Southern Pacific railroad companies of Arizona and New Mexico, said to have been included in papers relative to the attempted transfer by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company of its land grant to the Southern Pacific railroad companies of Arizona, New Mexico, and California submitted to the Senate, but not printed under the former order of the Senate; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this communication, with the accompanying papers, will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The previous part of the documents was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then this communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the same committee.

Mr. INGALLS. My recollection is that the papers were laid upon the table. I should like to know what the docket entry is on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the former papers were referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The order will be entered, therefore, if there be no objection, to print this letter, with the accompanying papers, and refer the same to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting the report of the commission appointed under section 3 of the act approved March 3, 1883, to investigate the railway mail service and devise a system of gauging rates of pay for carrying the mails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The report to which the Postmaster-General alludes was sent to the House of Representatives and is in print there. The communication alone, therefore, will be printed here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a list of claims of postmasters presented under the act of March 17, 1882, authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for losses by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualties, showing the action taken by him thereon; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a list accompanying it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The list was sent to the House of Representatives and will be printed there. The communication of the Postmaster General only, unless some Senator desires a reprint here, will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of December 10, 1883, copies of all papers now on file in the Interior Department relating to the transfer of the land grant of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company; which, on motion of Mr. HILL, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting the return of the report of Prof. J. E. Nourse on the Suez Canal, for the purpose of adding to it important information received since it was submitted to the Senate on March 30, 1882. The Chair will state that the letter was addressed to the Chair as President of the Senate, and not to the Senate, asking that this paper, which was sent to the Senate a year ago and has not yet been printed, be returned to the Department for addition and revision, bringing it down to this time. If there be no objection, the Secretary will be directed to return the report to the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose indicated, and his letter will be placed on file.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Mrs. Caroline Hall Smith, of Milton, Vt., as heir of Capt. John Hall, of the Revolutionary army, praying remuneration for property taken from him by the enemy during the Revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

He also presented the petition of C. C. Lancaster, attorney in fact for the heirs of Richard S. Coxe, deceased, praying payment of their claim against the United States for legal services, as found due in report of Court of Claims, No. 249, Thirty-sixth Congress, first session; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Charles C. Lancaster, attorney in fact for Joseph E. Nourse, William E. Nourse, and E. M. Nourse, heirs of Michael Nourse, deceased, praying payment of amount found due and allowed Michael Nourse in his lifetime by the Court of Claims for services rendered as Register of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of James Martin, of Omarel, Holt County, Nebraska, praying for a donation for the support of Daniel Martin, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Pope, Berry & Hall, and 19 other firms, of Burlington, Vt., jobbers and dealers in tobacco, snuff, cigars, &c., praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of S. A. Groff, of Washington, D. C., praying for the adoption by the Senate of his invention known as "The groff voting indicator and page or messenger call;" which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also presented the petitions of Mrs. Sarah Williams and Mrs. Rebecca Turner, of Bowdon, Ga.; and the petition of Mrs. L. Myra Morse, of South Lubec, Me., praying for an increase of widows' pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am requested to present the petition of a number of American artists in Rome, praying for a repeal of the duty on works of art. I do not know but that on the whole it would be better to have the paper read or printed. I will ask that an order be made that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the Library. I ask that at the request of others, with some doubt as to the committee to which it should properly go. The Committee on the Library usually has charge of the purchase of works of art, and the Committee on Finance necessarily has charge of the question of levying a duty and determining whether it ought to be repealed or not. I will move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Library, unless there is objection made to such a reference.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not very important to which committee the petition shall be referred, but it clearly ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance. That committee may not have power at present to act upon it, but I do not see how the Committee on the Library will ever have any power to act upon it. I move to amend the motion by referring the petition to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. On this side of the Chamber we did not hear the Senator from Ohio when he stated what the petition was.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a petition of American artists living abroad praying for a repeal of the duty on works of art, and it comes to me with a request that I ask that it be printed (and I think it is very proper to print it, because it sets out the argument for the repeal of that duty), and also that it be referred to the Committee on the Library with a view of having the question of the propriety of the duty inquired into by that committee. As I am a member of both committees, I do not, as a matter of course, care to which it is referred, but I comply with the suggestion that it be referred to the Committee on the Library, and then if that committee should deem the prayer a proper one the matter would naturally and necessarily go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does it affect the finances entirely?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does. The prayer of the petition is to repeal a duty levied by existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me the petition ought to go to the Committee on Finance, very clearly.

Mr. EDMUNDS (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Certainly at the first glance there would be no doubt, and if there was such a bill now pending before the Committee on Finance the petition clearly ought to go there; but I rise to speak of it only because Mr. Story, the eminent gentleman who heads the petition, sent it to me with an explanatory letter, the petition being signed I believe by all the American artists in Rome for this change or reduction; and inasmuch as there was no opportunity for the Senate at this time to act upon the matter and as it related to a difference of opinion between American artists abroad and American artists at home as to how this matter ought to be adjusted, and as the subject of the art question in its relations to the general interests of the country is one that the Committee on the Library have usually had charge of, I thought there would not be any impropriety to have it to go meantime to the Committee on the Library, who would receive from the artists of this country correspondence on the subject; and when the matter should be in a condition to be acted upon at all, then, with all the papers, it could be sent to the Committee on Finance. Therefore, occupying the chair, I handed the petition to my friend from Ohio with that suggestion and I hope my colleague will not object, as public attention is drawn, and some letters are already coming on the subject addressed to the Senator from Ohio and myself.

Mr. MORRILL. It is quite immaterial to me to which committee the petition may be referred, and if my colleague desires to have it referred to the Committee on the Library, I withdraw the amendment I moved to refer it to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am much obliged to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). If there be no objection the petition will be ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on the Library. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of James M. Dalzell, formerly private Company H, One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteers, praying to be granted arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a petition, very largely signed by merchants and business men, praying for the ratification of a treaty. I ask the Chair what is the usual course in such cases, whether it should be presented in executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It should be presented in executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will withhold it, then, for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Robert Anderson and others, members of Post No. 32, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of Francis S. Long and others, members of Post No. 30, Department of Connecticut, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of M. C. Johnson and others, members of the Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of S. P. Hosmer and others, of Post No. 140, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of George E. Brown and others, of Post 369, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of John Vandorn and others, of Post 206, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of W. H. Strain and others, members of the Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of W. W. Rowley and others, members of the Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of T. J. Lutton and others, ex-Union soldiers of Knoxville, Nebr.; the petition of W. B. Dugger and others, of Don Messic Post 339, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of William E. Axtell and others, of Wagoner Post No. 31, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of Barney Cole and others, ex-Union soldiers of Weigand, Knox County, Nebraska; the petition of A. J. Goodell and others, of Annett Post No. 124, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of H. O. Dodge and others, of Post No. 5, Department of Colorado, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of R. H. Taylor and others, members of the Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of J. R. Latta and others, of Post 54, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of Charles Beadle and others, of Post 86, Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of W. F. Bradley and others, of Woodbury Post No. 45, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic; the petition of C. L. Straight and others, ex-Union soldiers of Evanston, Wyo.; the petition of J. R. Wallace and others, of Post 199, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic; and the petition of James Bear and others, of Post 15, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the opening of the Sioux reservation in Dakota for settlement; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of ex-soldiers and sailors of the late war, citizens of New York, praying for a change of the pension laws for the benefit of ex-Union soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of R. Noble, of Woodstock, Me., praying for an increase of pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of A. B. Noyes, Fred W. Hoyt & Co., and other citizens of Fernandina, Fla., praying for an appropriation to pay the rebate provided by law on tobacco, snuff, cigars, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY. I present a petition of citizens of Grayson County, Texas, and a petition of citizens of Tarrant County, Texas, praying for the payment of rebate allowed dealers in tobacco, snuff, &c. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has referred all the petitions on that subject hitherto to the Committee on Appropriations, the law having already, as the Chair understands, provided for the rebate and it being only a question of appropriation.

Mr. MAXEY. Very well; let the petitions go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be so referred.

Mr. GARLAND. I present a similar petition to those presented by the Senator from Texas from Probst & Hilt and other citizens of Little Rock, Ark. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I present a communication from the governor of the State of Arkansas, in reference to the manner of apprehending and surrendering fugitives from justice to the Indian Nation; which I move be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of El Paso County, Texas, praying an appropriation for the erection of a public building to encourage and facilitate transactions in the increasing customs business and in the postal department in the city of El Paso; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. JONAS presented a petition of jobbers and importers of tobacco of New Orleans, praying for a tobacco rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Sarah E. Mooney, of Earlville, Cecil County, Maryland, dependent mother of George P. Ruby, late of Company B, Sixth Maryland Regiment, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of jobbers and dealers in manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars in Kansas City, State of Missouri, praying for an appropriation to pay the rebate claims already allowed in the Treasury Department, amounting, I believe, to something over $3,000,000, which have not been paid, and for which no appropriation has been made. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold in my hand a printed petition, which seems to have been gotton up in regular form.

The undersigned, whose residence is at Weaubleau City, in the county of Hickory, and State of Missouri, and who is now in receipt of a widow's pension, respectfully petitions your honorable body to enact that all pensions granted to widows and dependent relatives of persons of the military service at a less rate than $12 per month be increased to that rate.

And your petitioner prays that it be further enacted, that the necessary forms, information, and assistance to enable pensioned widows to obtain the said increase be furnished from and by the Pension Office without charge, and it be made a misdemeanor for any person to claim or receive any compensation or gratuity for services, or pretended services, in applying for or obtaining such increase as may be granted by your honorable body.

It is signed by Elizabeth Murry and attested by J. H. Nunn.

The petition is a regular printed petition; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Mary Hays, dependent mother of Darrel J. Hays, late sergeant of Company E, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, praying for special relief; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold in my hand a letter signed by the letter-carriers of Kansas City, Mo., addressed to me, but desiring legislation in regard to their rights. They want legislation authorizing an annual vacation of thirty days, such as is granted to most other employés of the Government, but which is denied to them. I hope that this petition will receive prompt consideration at the hands of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. If other employés of the Government performing no more arduous or confining labors are allowed, by mere discretion or by law, a regular leave of absence for thirty days, with pay, there is no reason why any discrimination should exist against letter-carriers. I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a letter addressed to him of the character named may be received and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition of the Board of Underwriters and others, of New York City, praying for an appropriation in behalf of the cable and signal communication between Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. This petition asks for an appropriation, but I think the matter should first be considered by the Committee on Commerce. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented two memorials of citizens of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 559) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of Garrett Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Liberty, N. Y., praying the pensioning of the veterans of the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition in regard to the ratification of the commercial treaty with Mexico, and move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that petitions with respect to the ratification of treaties should be presented in executive session and be entered on the executive journal. The Senator will therefore kindly withhold it until that time.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Very well.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the petition of McCord, Brady & Co. and others, of Omaha, Nebr., praying for necessary legislation for the payment of claims for rebate on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of several firms of North Adams, Mass., praying for the passage of a law for the payment of rebate on tobacco, snuff, cigars, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of Jacob Livingstone & Co. and others, of Carlisle, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the payment of rebate on tobacco, cigars, snuff, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of jobbers and dealers in manufactured tobacco, residents of Denver, Colo., praying for an appropriation for the payment of rebate on the various manufactures of tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of citizens of Oregon and Washington Territory, praying that the land grant of the Oregon Central Railroad Company (Astoria Railroad) be declared forfeited, including all lands within the overlapping grant, whether they may be in Washington Territory or in Oregon, and that they may be thrown open to public settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAPHAM presented the petition of Alida Dennis, of Amsterdam, Montgomery County, New York, wife of Benjamin H. Dennis, late private Company I, Thirty-first Regiment United States Colored Troops, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, praying that more suitable provision be made for the accommodation of the postal and judicial business of the United States in California; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Mary J. French, of Skowhegan, Me., widow of Dearborn P. French, late private in Company B, Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 652) to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York in the case of the Spanish ferry-boat Nuestra Señora de Regla, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PUGH. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 178) to repeal section 714 of the Revised Statutes, allowing pensions to judges in certain cases, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it ought not to pass, and to submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, and the further consideration of the bill will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection.

Mr. GEORGE. I object to its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 74) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral lands, and to secure to the State of Colorado the benefit of the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

TARIFF COMPILATION, 1884.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Finance in relation to the comparative tariffs, the present and the past, with various other statistics, authorized and ordered by the Senate at the last session. I wish to say that this report has been prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Finance, and I do it no more than justice in saying that it will be found a very valuable and interesting report. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Printing, and that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing? The Chair hears none. The report will be printed. Does the Senator wish to have it referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, as I desire to have some extra copies printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Vermont that probably it would be more convenient, in keeping the Journal, for him to introduce a resolution to print the number of extra copies he desires, and send the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual number of copies of the report will be printed, as all reports are printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 874) to further suspend the operation of section 5574 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 72, in relation to guano islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 875) for the relief of Charles C. Hill, of Urbana, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 876) for the relief of Daniel M. Cook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 877) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 878) for the relief of Louis C. Madeira and Emilio F. Cabada, of Philadelphia, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MAHONE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 879) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 880) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia and to regulate proceedings before them; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 881) for the relief of M. L. Wicks, of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 882) for the relief of William B. Stokes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PIKE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 883) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 884) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money wrongfully paid for duties on imports by Daniel Marcy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 885) to amend section 17 of act of July 2, 1864, providing for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that this is a railroad bill, but it asks for neither land nor bonds. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAIR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 886) to prevent the retroactive operation of that portion of the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882, limiting the number of graduates of the Naval Academy to be retained in the service, printed on page 285 of volume 22 of the United States Statutes at Large; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 887) for the relief of Herman Ruge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 888) for the relief of Perry G. Wall and the executors of O. B. Hart, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 889) for the improvement of the Suwannee River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 890) for continuing the work on the channel between Cumberland and Amelia Islands, Florida, and the entrance to Fernandina, Fla., and Saint Mary's, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 891) for the improvement of the channel at Key West, Fla., for the safety and convenience of the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 892) for continuing work on the bar of Saint John's River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 893) for the improvement of the Saint John's River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 894) for the improvement of certain channels, rivers, and harbors in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 895) for the relief of J. D. Morrison, surviving partner of C. M. & J. D. Morrison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 896) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 897) to facilitate the reform of the civil service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 898) to establish a navy-yard and depot of supplies on the Mississippi River at Algiers, or at some point between Algiers and Port Eads; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 899) to provide promotion in the corps of judge-advocates; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 900) to abrogate the powers of the executive officers of the United States in allowing indemnity locations or scrip for confirmed unsatisfied private land claims under section 3 of the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 11, pages 294 and 295, chapter 81), and to vest that power in the courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. LAMAR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 901) providing for the payment of judgments when rendered in the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PUGH (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 902) for the relief of Peter Targarona; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 903) for the relief of the heirs of Mark Davis, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 904) to confirm a certain land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 905) for the relief of Hugh Dougherty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 906) for the relief of Napoleon B. Drummond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 907) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Sibley, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 908) to grant a right of way through the Indian Territory to the Southern Kansas Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. I am uncertain to what committee the bill should be appropriately referred. It provides for granting a right of way to a railroad company through the Indian Territory, and might properly go either to the Committee on Railroads or to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Inasmuch as the rights of the Indians would be affected more or less by the passage of the bill, I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 909) to increase the pension of Martin Kelly and to rate him in the second grade of pensioners; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 910) providing for continuing the improvement of Pensacola Harbor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LOGAN (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 911) for the relief of Charles H. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 912) granting a pension to Henry A. Armstrong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 913) to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 914) to create an additional land district in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS (Mr. GARLAND in the chair) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 915) to permit the owners of certain vessels to sue the United States in the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave, without previous notice, to introduce another bill on the same subject, and to say in this connection that both these bills have been sent me by gentlemen learned in the law, and I have examined them sufficiently to think that the matter deserves inquiry, although I do not at this moment commit myself to the propriety of either of the bills.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 916) to permit the owners of certain vessels to sue the United States in the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the second bill may be referred also to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My recollection is that bills similar to that have usually gone to the Committee on Claims. It is true that committee has a great deal of work on its hands, perhaps more than it can do, but if bills of that character heretofore have gone to that committee I think they ought to go there now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will allow the Senator from Vermont to state from the chair that these bills relate purely to collision cases, which are now tried in the district courts, under a certain fiction of law sometimes. The Senator from Vermont therefore thought the Judiciary Committee was the proper one, but the Chair will change the reference, on the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, with pleasure. The bills will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 917) granting a pension to Alida Dennis, widow of Benjamin H. Dennis, late a private in Company I, Thirty-first Regiment United States Colored Troops; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 918) for the relief of Greenleaf Cilley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 919) for the relief of John M. McClintock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 920) for the relief of John Ogden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 921) for the relief of Elijah Crudgington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 922) for the relief of John Gibson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 923) for the relief of John G. Leefe, first lieutenant Nineteenth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 924) for the relief of First Lieutenant M. O'Brien, Fourth United States Artillery; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 925) granting a pension to John B. Childs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 926) granting a pension to Levi H. Naron; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 927) granting a pension to James Rockwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 928) granting a pension to Sarah Cadis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 929) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 930) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 931) granting a pension to Amanda Reeder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 932) for the relief of Mary Jane Thompson, executrix of Jeter L. Thompson, deceased, late surgeon Third Indian Home Guard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 933) for the relief of the estate of H. H. Dalrymple, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 934) for the relief of the officers and crew of the United States sloop of war Cumberland who engaged the Merrimac on the 8th of March, 1862, and went down with her colors flying; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 935) for the relief of August Thieman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLATER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 936) to provide for the payment of so much of the expenses incurred by the Territories of Oregon and Washington in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856 as have not been heretofore provided for and paid; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 937) restoring to settlement lands withdrawn therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior under section 4 of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia River, to Fort Boisé," approved February 25, 1857; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 938) confirming to W. S. Byers & Co., of Pendleton, Oreg., the right to take and use water from the Umatilla River, on the Umatilla Indian reservation in the State of Oregon, for manufacturing and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 939) for the relief of Ezra Hayes, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 940) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers of the State of Missouri for payments to officers and enlisted men of her militia forces, made since April 22, 1882, for services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, and to report to Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 941) for the relief of Martin E. Smith, of Webb City, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COKE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 942) to provide for the purchase of the necessary land and the erection thereon of a custom-house and post-office building in the city of El Paso, Tex.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 943) for the relief of R. D. Hay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GARLAND (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 944) to incorporate the United States Gas Electric Light and Fuel Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 945) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of the passes between the affluents of the Upper Missouri and Columbia Rivers for the purpose of ascertaining the distances between the navigable waters of said rivers and the practicability of uniting said rivers by canal or otherwise; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 946) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 947) granting a pension to Powhattan B. Short; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Emma A. Porch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 949) to amend and correct an act approved January 29, 1879, authorizing the appointment of Dr. Junius L. Powell an assistant surgeon United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 950) changing the name of the Real Estate Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANDERSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 951) to authorize the Capital Cable Railway of Washington to construct its railway on certain streets of said city; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, but if there be no objection the Chair will continue to receive the current business of the morning hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 952) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Decatur, Burt County, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 953) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 34) for the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 in accordance with the earnest request of the Mississippi River commission for the preservation, repair, and construction of certain works for the improvement of the said river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 35) to correct clerical errors in the resolution referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Twilight to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 36) to authorize the Secretary of State to reimburse Sam C. Reid for certain expenditures; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of W. M. Raines be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate all the documentary information in his possession relating to the execution of the act of Congress entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, together with all facts which may have come to his knowledge concerning the difficulties which may have been encountered by the officers of his Department in the enforcement of said act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, the morning hour is closed. The Chair will state, the Calendar now being in order, that the unfinished business of a preceding sitting was the consideration of the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules, but at the last sitting day of the Senate the Senate adjourned before the morning hour expired, and the unfinished business of the preceding session was not laid before the Senate. Strictly, therefore, the Chair thinks that the unfinished business has lost its precedence as unfinished business, unless there was some understanding to the contrary. The Chair was not present at the time. If there be no objection, under the circumstances, as the last day's sitting was an informal one, the Chair will treat the unfinished business of the preceding sitting as now the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Maine if he desires to go on with that order this morning?

Mr. FRYE. I do very much.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice that when this order is out of the way I shall ask to take up the bill to fix the day for the meeting of electors of President and Vice-President, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Chair regarding the unfinished business? The Chair hears none. The report of the Committee on Rules is now before the Senate.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. INGALLS. Before that report is actually taken up I ask that Senate bill No. 1, which has been read the first time and has been on the Calendar since the appointment of the committees, may be read a second time and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 1) to amend section 2 of an act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1879, was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that all the bills which were introduced before the appointment of committees be appropriately referred, so that they may be removed from the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he understands some of those bills have been laid on the table with a view to the gentlemen introducing them submitting some remarks before the reference occurs.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is precisely the suggestion I was going to make to the Senator from Massachusetts. Let the bills be called over in their order, and, unless some Senator desires that they be retained on the Calendar, let them be referred.

Mr. HOAR. I see they have all been read twice except the one called up by the Senator from Kansas; so perhaps the movers desire that they shall remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression that the bills now on the table which have been read twice were laid there on motion of the Senators introducing them.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 21st ultimo, approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing the payment of the salaries of employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. At the last sitting on this order, Rule XVII, page 15, had been gone through with, the Chair is informed. Rule XVIII will now be reported.

Mr. FRYE. If the President pleases, there were under consideration at adjournment the amendments which refer to the District of Columbia Committee the appropriation bills for the District, and those amendments were not determined. There is to be a vote taken on those two amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the clerk at the desk that when that matter was under consideration the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] requested that that subject be passed over until the other rules should have been gone through with, and by unanimous consent that suggestion was agreed to, and it is so entered.

Mr. FRYE. I was mistaken; I remember it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XVIII will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVIII.

AMENDMENT MAY BE LAID ON THE TABLE WITHOUT PREJUDICE TO THE BILL.

When an amendment proposed to any pending measure is laid on the table it shall not carry with it, or prejudice, such measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this rule.

The rule was agreed to.

Rule XIX was read, as follows:

RULE XIX.

AMENDMENTS—DIVISION OF A QUESTION.

If the question in debate contain several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition; nor shall it prevent a motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion to strike out prevent a motion to strike out and insert. But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of Rule XIX.

Mr. FRYE. There is no change made there.

The rule was agreed to.

Rule XX was read, as follows:

RULE XX.

DEBATE.

1. When a Senator desires to speak he shall rise and address the presiding officer, and shall not proceed until he is recognized, and the presiding officer shall recognize the Senator who shall first address him. No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the presiding officer; and no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate.

2. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the presiding officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order; which motion shall be determined without debate.

3. If a Senator be called to order for words spoken in debate, upon the demand of the Senator or of any other Senator, the exceptional words shall be taken down in writing, and read at the table for the information of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. The word "exceptional" I suppose was intended for "exceptionable." It is probably a misprint.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; that should be "exceptionable."

Mr. HOAR. The comma should be stricken out after the word "Senator" in the second line of the third clause, where it occurs the second time. The clause reads:

Upon the demand of the Senator or of any other Senator, the exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing.

The clause beginning "upon the demand of the Senator" refers to what follows, and the comma should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed will be made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maine an amendment to come in at the close of the first subdivision. The last clause of the first subdivision reads as follows:

And no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate.

I propose to add "Which shall be determined without debate." If that provision be not contained in the rule, the question whether the Senate will give leave or not might be discussed indefinitely. I am not tenacious about it, but I suggest the amendment to the Senator from Maine, if he thinks it is important.

Mr. FRYE. I see no objection, certainly, to providing that it shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The question is on the adoption of Rule XX as amended.

The rule was agreed to.

Rule XXI was read, as follows:

RULE XXI.

QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

1. A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, except when the Senate is dividing, and, unless submitted to the Senate, shall be decided by the presiding officer without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate; when an appeal is taken, any subsequent question of order which may arise before the decision of such appeal shall be decided by the presiding officer without debate; and every appeal therefrom shall be decided at once, and without debate; and any appeal may be laid on the table without prejudice to the pending proposition, and thereupon shall be held as affirming the decision of the presiding officer.

2. The presiding officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXII was read, as follows:

RULE XXII.

MOTIONS.

1. All motions entertained by the presiding officer shall be reduced to writing, if desired by him or by any Senator, and shall be read before the same shall be debated.

2. Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave.

Mr. HOAR. Why is the change in that phraseology? Suppose a motion be not entertained by the presiding officer, should it not be reduced to writing for the information of the Senate, if any question of order arises on it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I supposed there might be some reason for the change in the mind of the chairman of the committee. From a hasty reading of this rule, the committee have substituted a new phraseology for the old, and that new phraseology confines the right to require a motion to be put in writing to such motions as the Chair holds in order and entertains. Now, I submit that that is too restricted, and that it should apply to any motion which is the subject of action by the Senate. It seems to me the rule would read better thus:

All motions shall be reduced to writing if desired by the presiding officer or by any Senator.

Mr. FRYE. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is right, and I accept the proposed amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Can a motion be acted upon unless it be entertained by the Chair?

Mr. HOAR. Suppose a motion be made by a Senator which is held by the Chair to be out of order, which he says he cannot entertain at that time, the question whether that can be received may be submitted to the Senate as a question of order, and, if so, the Senate ought to have a right to have the motion before them in writing, to go into the Journal, and for information.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts improves the rule, and I suggest to the chairman that he accept it.

Mr. FRYE. I accept the amendment. Let it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

All motions shall be reduced to writing, if desired by the presiding officer or by any Senator, and shall be read before the same shall be debated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule as amended was adopted.

Rule XXIII was read, as follows:

RULE XXIII.

PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS.

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business,
To lay on the table,
To postpone indefinitely,
To postpone to a day certain,
To commit,
To amend;
which several motions shall have precedence as they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Rules whether that rule as now stated provides for the motion to refer a private claim to the Court of Claims? Does the chairman understand that that is to be treated as a motion to amend?

Mr. FRYE. Not necessarily a motion to come under this rule, because, as I understand it, it is provided for in some former rule.

Mr. HOAR. In Rule XVI, on the fifteenth page.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think that is not a sufficient provision to make it a privileged motion?

Mr. HOAR. I presume it is a motion to amend really.

Mr. FRYE. It seems so to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir. I am satisfied with the answer of the chairman of the committee.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXIV was read, as follows:

RULE XXIV.

PREAMBLES.

When a bill or resolution is accompanied by a preamble, the question shall first be put on the bill or resolution and then on the preamble, which may be withdrawn by a mover before an amendment of the same, or ordering of the yeas and nays; or it may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill or resolution, and shall be a final disposition of such preamble.

Mr. FRYE. There is no change there.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXV was read, as follows:

RULE XXV.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

1. In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof. All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

2. When a chairman of a committee shall resign or cease to serve on a committee, and the presiding officer be authorized by the Senate to fill the vacancy in such committee, unless specially otherwise ordered, it shall be only to fill up the number on the committee.

The rule was adopted.

The Secretary proceeded to read Rule XXVI, as follows:

RULE XXVI.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

1. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:
A Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee on Finance, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Appropriations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Agriculture, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Public Lands, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Private Land Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Pensions, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Claims, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE. That is the same amendment which was postponed at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] under Rule XVII, and it had better be postponed until he returns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the clause just read will be postponed until the other rules are disposed of.

The reading of the proposed rule was continued, as follows:

A Committee on Patents, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of five Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Territories, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Railroads, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of three Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.
A Committee on Printing, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on the Library, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Rules, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Engrossed Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate.
A Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
A Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.
A Committee on Commerce, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to commerce, to shipping, to the merchant marine, and to the Life-Saving Service and light-houses.
A Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, to consist of seven Senators, which shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditures as shall be referred to it, and conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate, unless the Senate shall otherwise direct.
A Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, to consist of five Senators.
2. The Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Printing, and on the Library shall continue and have power to act until their successors are appointed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I move to amend the clause in reference to the Committee on Agriculture, so as to strike out "seven" and insert "nine," so as to read:

A Committee on Agriculture, to consist of nine Senators.

Almost all the leading committees of the Senate relating to the general affairs of the country, I observe, have nine Senators and one committee has as many as eleven Senators. I suppose it has been a mere oversight that the Committee on Agriculture has not been increased in the manner that the others have been.

I need not discuss the question before the Senate to show the propriety of having all the different portions of the United States, and all of its great leading industries indeed, represented upon that committee. If there is any necessity at all for such a committee, then the distribution of the representation upon that committee ought to be territorially equal throughout the length and breadth of the land. I think it will be really advantageous and wise to make the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I trust that that motion will prevail. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and I know that it is very desirable that every section of the country should be represented there, and particularly the different agricultural interests of the different sections. I know that it is the desire of every member of that committee that it should so represent the entire country, and that the Committee on Agriculture to a certain extent should be restored to its old usefulness. Of late years it has had few, if any, duties to perform; it has had little, if any, influence upon that great department of our industries. I shall propose at the proper time, when we go over these rules again, to move also that the appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department shall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture for their consideration.

I will not take up the time of the Senate now in discussing that, but at the proper time I shall move that as a proper amendment, which I trust will prevail. I think the wisdom of increasing the Agricultural Committee to nine will be conceded by the Senate on a moment's consideration.

Mr. FRYE. I shall not oppose the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] striking out "seven" and inserting "nine" as the number to constitute the Committee on Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I observe that two of the present standing committees of the Senate are omitted from the proposed rule. Those are the Committee on Manufactures and the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. There may be and there doubtless was some good reason which influenced the Committee on Rules to omit these two standing committees from the proposed new rule. I will inquire of the chairman of that committee why those two standing committees are omitted from the proposed rule.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, under the rule as reported by the committee provision is made for two new committees, one on internal improvements and one on the expenditures of public money, both regarded by them as important committees. On examining the list of the committees, not desiring to increase the number unless it was absolutely necessary, they concluded to drop out Manufactures and Revolutionary Claims as having but little business to do. That was the only reason that I know of.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I notice that three committees, one of them I think the Committee on Printing, are continued until their successors are appointed. Does that give those committees power to sit during the recess?

Mr. FRYE. It was so supposed by the Committee on Rules, and that amendment was offered for that purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it does not say "with power to sit during the recess." The Committee on Printing now has to ask leave to sit during the recess at the conclusion of every session.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is that?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because there is business that is intrusted to the control of the committee that comes up during the recess. The Public Printer is authorized to do certain things with the assent of the Committee on Printing. I have been here several times on business of the committee during the recess, but I may say it has never cost the Government anything, either for expenses or time.

Mr. FRYE. The committee understood that it was necessary for those committees named to sit during the recess on certain occasions, that there were contracts to be made by the Library Committee and contracts perhaps by the Printing Committee, and this provision was suggested as covering the ground by the present occupant of the chair who was a member of one of those committees.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I understand that the rule as framed now gives those committees permission to sit during the recess?

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Rules so understood it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the proposed rule by inserting immediately after "a Committee on Appropriations, to consist of nine Senators":

A Committee on Manufactures, to consist of seven Senators.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that amendment will be adopted. We have here now committees relating to public lands, Indian affairs, pensions, claims, patents, public buildings and grounds, railroads, mines and mining, education and labor, &c., which may be said to be business that has reference to special functions of the Government or special employments of the people. I can see no good reason why we should adopt the rule of referring to a certain standing committee all questions relating to agriculture, and all questions relating to mines and mining to another committee, and have nobody here to whom we can refer the very great and important questions which relate to manufactures.

Manufactures in the United States comprise one of its leading industries. Perhaps we get more actual gain in a monetary way, we make more progress toward the development of our manufactures, than we do in any other department of industry; and it seems to me that there is no occasion now for departing from a rule which we have established and which has worked very well heretofore, in striking out this committee.

It may be said, and properly, too, that the committee has not had much to do. I think I can see in the future, if not at present, that this committee may have a great deal to do with many of the most important interests of this country and with one of the most respectable of all its industrial classes. I can see no reason why such a committee as this should not be charged with such an investigation as we have had during the last recess, in which some of the members of this body have engaged very laboriously, in ascertaining with reference to the soundness of certain complaints that have been made concerning our financial condition, our manufacturing condition, and in fact concerning our social condition.

It seems to me that that committee will find very much employment if the Senate addresses itself to the complaints which are being continually made through the newspapers and through societies and otherwise in respect of the falling away of the manufacturing industries, strikes, and all things that concern that immense laboring community known as mechanics and industrial men. I really can see no reason for abolishing this committee.

Now, as to the question of the number of committees of this body, we find that a few committees of this body are very much overtaxed with work. Constant complaint is being made in respect of some of these committees that they have more than they can do. Probably that arises from the want of a proper division of labor by the order of the Senate. But there can be no doubt at all that in this House and in the other House the legislation of this country is every day becoming more and more disposed of, put into shape, and completed in every respect, through the action of committees, than it has been in years past. In other words, we are getting to be so large a people, to have so large a representation, and to have such varied and numerous interests to be taken care of by the lawmakers of this land, that we are compelled to intrust to committees the consideration of questions of the greatest possible moment; and when a bill comes into the Senate backed by the unanimous vote, or nearly so, of one of the standing committees of this body, it is very well understood that that recommendation carries with it so much force as that the bill may be said to be destined almost to pass this body. That being the drift of legislation, and that drift arising from the fact that we have such an enormous increase of people, of power, and of wealth coming in year after year, it seems to me we should consult a wise economy by so arranging the committees of the Senate as that the different members of this body shall be charged with the duty of examining into every one of these important matters, and I think that if you will distribute the labors of this body more generally through a greater number of committees, you will find that investigations will be more complete and more satisfactory to the country.

I find that the House of Representatives recognizes the necessity of dividing up the labor of some of its committees in obedience to the very demand I have mentioned; and our Committee on Rules itself finds it necessary to strike out two of the committees here, in order to give place to some others that they put in position, new committees entirely in this body, for the mere sake of the division of labor, in order that subjects that come before the Senate may have a thorough and proper consideration in the committees.

There are quite a number of very able men in the Senate of the United States to-day who have very little employment in this body except to debate questions as they come in from the important leading committees, and I think that the best way to furnish these gentlemen with an opportunity to serve the country with the ability that they possess, and with the faithfulness for which they have become proverbial, is to give them work to do upon the important leading standing committees. I think this is one of the important standing committees of this body; I think it should be retained, and that we are not consulting true economy when we cut down the number of these committees.

There is another industry in this country which I will advert to merely for the sake of illustrating the points I am trying to make, and that is the fisheries. When I first came to the Senate the fisheries were a matter of very minor consideration. The merest show of experiment was being made in respect of the scattering of food-fishes through the United States, the cultivation of fishes, the preparing of ways for them to ascend the rivers, &c. That very vast and important industry has never had the recognition of a committee of this body to whom a bill relating to the fisheries could properly be referred. I remember an incident that occurred here last year or the year before last, when a question arose between several of the States on the northeastern coast, I believe between Maine first, and afterward, perhaps, Massachusetts, and later, I know, New Jersey, and the Government of the United States, upon a point of jurisdiction as to how far the jurisdiction of the United States extended into the sea from the actual shore for the protection or for the regulation of the fisheries; we had to refer that to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and there was but one pretext for it that could be thought of, and that was the fact that whatever action might be taken by the Senate in declaring the law disputed between the Government and several of the States might affect our relations with Great Britain in consequence of our fisheries treaties along the northeastern coast. Upon that pretext the bill was sent before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and an investigation, which I think is a very important one, is now about to be reported.

There should be in this list of committees a committee on fisheries, and perhaps a portion of their duties should relate also to animal industry, to the question of food supply of the people of the United States through the fishes of the rivers and seas and the animals that we raise upon this vast territory of ours. Now, to illustrate a little more, it has not been more than twenty years since all the plains of the West were covered by swarming herds of buffalo. They were there to feed the Indians, to keep up their hostilities and their savagery. They have been swept away by the march of civilization, and to-day I have no doubt that there are three splendid bullocks upon the plains being fattened for human food and to contribute to commerce where there was ever one buffalo to be found. When our industries are progressing in this immense ratio, we are not consulting the real progress of the country and we are not discharging our duty as I think we should by the sort of economy that prevents us from having committees enough to be charged with the special duty of investigating in respect to these very important matters.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not feel called upon to defend the action of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] to insert—

A Committee on Manufactures, to consist of seven Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the rule as amended.

Mr. FRYE. I do not feel exactly at liberty to have this rule adopted now in the absence of the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Commerce. There is a very important division of that committee, taking from it at least one-half of its present work and giving it to another committee, on Internal Improvements. While I do not wish to delay the consideration of the rules, and will not for his absence longer than to-morrow, I will ask that that portion of this rule, that clause, be permitted to pass over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is proposed to pass over two clauses——

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the clause relating to the Committee on Internal Improvements and the Committee on Commerce be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that as to the Committee on the District of Columbia also?

Mr. FRYE. And the Committee on the District of Columbia also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is on the adoption of the remaining clauses of the rule.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the proposed rule by inserting after the provision which provides for a Committee on Pensions the following:

A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope this motion will prevail. The Committee on Revolutionary Claims has always been assigned to the minority of the Senate. The committee-room is a large room, and it is a very convenient place for Senators of the minority to assemble.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that I think during the last session by a resolution of the Senate that room was made a consultation-room for the minority of the Senate, and I think it is now held as a consultation-room and not used as a committee-room at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. Was that by resolution of the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. By resolution of the Senate, my recollection is.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought it was by the courtesy of the chairman of that committee, who is not now present.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it will be found on examination that it was by resolution of the Senate. I see that room is labeled as a consultation-room of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the clerk at the desk that no such rule or resolution appears on record. It was understood to be agreed to by the courtesy of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I know the committee has moved out, and my impression was that by resolution of the Senate that room had been set apart to the minority of the Senate without regard to which side should be in the minority. That is the fact, but the clerk of course knows better than I do whether such a rule was adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think at any rate it is safer to leave it as it was. The courtesy of the chairman of that committee would always open it to fellow-Senators of his own party, and if we have it for a consultation-room a resolution will have to be offered at every session.

Mr. FRYE. As representing the Committee on Rules, I do not care to debate the question at all. It is a very simple question, understood by all Senators, and of course the majority of the Senate should control in a matter of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Are amendments to this rule still in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add after the words "a Committee on Agriculture, to consist of seven Senators," the following:

To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

I do not think this is the proper place to insert this amendment, but at the same time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will allow the Chair to suggest that the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] gave notice of such a motion to be made by him at a future stage of the consideration of the rules.

Mr. PLUMB. At some future time, he stated, he would move it, but if the amendment which has been inserted by the committee in a subsequent part of the rule requiring the appropriation bills for the District of Columbia to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia is proper in this connection, this is also proper, and I think the Senator from New York would have made the motion if he had observed what my attention has just been called to, that the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia is fixed by this rule. I do not think this is the proper place for fixing that of either committee, but as the Committee on Rules have adopted that plan, I think now is the proper time to bring it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Kansas that that clause has been passed over at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The clause in regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill has been passed over and has not been considered.

Mr. PLUMB. Will that carry with it this enumeration or statement of the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia Committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the very point that has been reserved for future consideration at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to Rule XVII. In Rule XVII it is provided that the appropriation bills for the District shall go to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and of course if that was adopted it would be absolutely necessary that this clause should be in this rule, but both those provisions have been passed over at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, if he desires to submit a similar proposition touching the appropriation bill for agriculture, that he allow both of these amendments to wait until in the Senate amendments can be offered to both Rules XVII and XXVI.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to waiting, but I will make this further suggestion, that if this question of the jurisdiction of the committees is to go over at all, it ought all to go over, because while I perceive great propriety in the amendment which I have proposed, I think there may be others of the same general character which are equally proper, and when we come to adjust this question of the jurisdiction of the committees I think it ought all to be done at once and that whatever rule we apply ought to obtain all the way through. If one part of it is to go over, it ought all to go over. If it be in order, I therefore move that all questions relating to the jurisdiction of committees be postponed to await the consideration of the question which has heretofore been laid over at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. FRYE. I hardly see how a motion of that kind can now be in order. I suppose that all pending motions touching the jurisdiction of committees—and the Senator might offer his motion and consider it as one pending—may be laid over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Kansas that an independent resolution of the kind offered by him probably would not be in order, but a motion to amend the rule could be pending and could be laid over.

Mr. PLUMB. I made a motion to amend the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Kansas to move to amend the rule by inserting after the clause relating to the Committee on Agriculture the words:

To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

And the Senator from Kansas further moves that the consideration of that subject lie over with other clauses of a similar kind.

Mr. PLUMB. For the purpose of bringing the whole question up it is necessary to make several motions, and I will therefore make a similar motion in regard to the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs with relation to the Naval and Army appropriation bills. It seems to me when we come to consider the question of what the several committees shall do, the class of subjects that shall be referred to them for the purpose of subdividing the labors of the Senate, that question ought all to come up together. My motion, therefore, was—and I do not see why it can not be in order—that all questions relating to the jurisdiction of committees be postponed until the time named in the former order of the Senate concerning the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be perfectly competent for the Senator to move that the rule itself lie over for future consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well, if that is the only proper motion, I move that the consideration of Rule XXVI be postponed. Perhaps I had better ask unanimous consent that the rule go over until the time to which the consideration of Rule XVII has been postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to postpone the further consideration of Rule XXVI until the previous Rule XVII is considered.

Mr. HOAR. That is not deferred to any particular time. Why is it not best to have unanimous consent that this rule be passed over informally at present, to be called up when the Senator from Iowa returns?

Mr. PLUMB. If that is the understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. I want the attention of the Senator from Kansas for a moment. I think the proposition he makes is eminently proper in view of the fact that we are likely to set a precedent by referring the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I want to call his attention to one point, that he may think of it when he puts his amendment in form and calls it up. Would there not be propriety in establishing as a rule that all matters of appropriation shall first go to the particular committees having charge of the subjects to which those appropriations relate and then afterward be referred to the Committee on Appropriations? While he is looking into the matter I wish to call his attention to that suggestion, to see whether it would not be proper to incorporate it into the rules. Take, for example, the matter referring to expenditures in the Agricultural Department. First let them go to the Committee on Agriculture, and then be referred, after that committee has acted upon them, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a most excellent suggestion, and one that I have already given some thought to, and there are a great many other questions which grow out of it that make it very proper that in this most important part of the rules practically we should consider this question by itself; that is to say, a time should be set apart when the question of the jurisdiction of the committees, embracing all these things which may not only go on appropriation bills but the course which all bills shall take, should receive consideration separate and apart from all other portions of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of this rule being informally passed over?

Mr. INGALLS. Until what time, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations returns.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; that was not his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the way the motion is put now.

Mr. INGALLS. The agreement, as it appears on page 230 of the RECORD, is:

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the rule which we are considering now, relating to appropriations, be passed over until the remaining rules have been considered.

Therefore the postponement was not to depend upon the return of the Senator from Iowa. I understand that he is absent in consequence of some personal bereavement, and it therefore would not be proper, if we are to consider these rules continuously, that this subject should be postponed longer than is suggested in that motion or request made by the Senator from Iowa, that is, that it should go over until the remaining rules have been considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas accept the suggestion of his colleague?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir. My motion was that it should go over for the time, to come up with Rule XVII, according to the previous order of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. That is, when the remaining rules have been considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be considered the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand the Senator from Kansas to ask that the rule relative to the jurisdiction of the committees be laid over.

Mr. PLUMB. Each of the committees.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope that will be done for the reason stated by him. I think there is very great reason why the items relating to appropriations for the Post-Office Department should go to the Post-Office Committee, and items relating to the Army to the Military Committee, and then be reported to the Appropriations Committee for their consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the rule is passed over until action shall be had on the other rules.

Rule XXVII was read, as follows:

RULE XXVII.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEES; MOTIONS TO DISCHARGE AND REPORTS OF COMMITTEES TO LIE OVER.

1. When motions are made for reference of a subject to a select committee, or to a standing committee, the question of reference to a standing committee shall be put first; and a motion simply to refer shall not be open to amendment, except to add instructions.

2. All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of a subject, and all subjects from which a committee shall be discharged, shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXVIII was read, as follows:

RULE XXVIII.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXIX was read, as follows:

RULE XXIX.

MESSAGES.

1. Messages from the President of the United States or from the House of Representatives may be received at any stage of proceedings, except while the Senate is dividing, or while the Journal is being read, or while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending.

2. Messages shall be sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary, who shall previously certify the determination of the Senate upon all bills, joint resolutions, and other resolutions which may be communicated to the House, or in which its concurrence may be requested; and the Secretary shall also certify and deliver to the President of the United States all resolutions and other communications which may be directed to him by the Senate.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXX was read, as follows:

RULE XXX.

PRINTING OF PAPERS, ETC.

1. Every motion to print documents, reports, and other matter transmitted by either of the Executive Departments, or to print memorials, petitions, accompanying documents, or any other paper, except bills of the Senate or House of Representatives, resolutions submitted by a Senator, communications from the Legislatures or conventions, lawfully called, of the respective States, and motions to print by order of the standing or select committees of the Senate, shall, unless the Senate otherwise order, be referred to the Commitee on Printing. When a motion is made to commit with instructions, it shall be in order to add thereto a motion to print.

2. Motions to print additional numbers shall also be referred to the Committee on Printing; and when the committee shall report favorably, the report shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof; and when the cost of printing such additional numbers shall exceed the sum of $500, the concurrence of the House of Representatives shall be necessary for an order to print the same.

3. Every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave or reported from a committee, and all bills and joint resolutions received from the House of Representatives, and all reports of committees, shall be printed, unless, for the dispatch of the business of the Senate, such printing may be dispensed with.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXI was read, as follows:

RULE XXXI.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

1. No memorial or other paper presented to the Senate, except original treaties finally acted upon, shall be withdrawn from its files except by order of the Senate. But when an act may pass for the settlement of any private claim, the Secretary is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement the papers on file relating to the claim.

2. No memorial or other paper upon which an adverse report has been made shall be withdrawn from the files of the Senate unless copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Secretary.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXII was read, as follows:

RULE XXXII.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS ADVERSELY REPORTED.

Whenever a committee of the Senate, to whom any claim has been referred, reports adversely, and the report is agreed to, it shall not be in order to move to take the papers from the files for the purpose of referring them at a subsequent session, unless the claimant shall present a petition therefor, stating that new evidence has been discovered since the report, and setting forth such new evidence.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The last clause provides that the claimant shall set forth such new evidence. I think the construction which would be given to that would be that the whole of the new evidence must be set forth. I think that would be imposing an unnecessary hardship upon the claimant, and I propose to amend as follows:

And setting forth the substance of such new evidence.

Mr. HARRIS. The language employed would probably be construed as the Senator suggests. I do not think such, however, was the intention of the Committee on Rules. I see no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule as amended was adopted.

Rule XXXIII was read, as follows:

RULE XXXIII.

BUSINESS CONTINUED FROM SESSION TO SESSION.

At the second or any subsequent session of a Congress the legislative business of the Senate which remained undetermined at the close of the next preceding session of that Congress shall be resumed and proceeded with in the same manner as if no adjournment of the Senate had taken place; and all subjects referred to committees and not reported upon at the close of a session of Congress shall be returned to the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and be retained by him until the next succeeding session of that Congress, when they shall be returned to the several committees to which they had previously been referred.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the word "papers" be used instead of "subjects"? It hardly seems to be good English to say:

And all subjects referred to committees and not reported upon at the close of a session of Congress shall be returned to the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I think "papers" would be a more appropriate word. I move the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule as amended was adopted.

Rule XXXIV was read, as follows:

RULE XXXIV.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

1. No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session except as follows:

The officers of the Senate.
Members of the House of Representatives and the Clerk of the House.
The President of the United States and his private secretary.
The heads of Departments.
Ministers of the United States.
Foreign ministers.
Ex-Presidents and ex-Vice-Presidents of the United States.
Ex-Senators and Senators-elect.
Judges of the Supreme Court.
Governors of States and Territories.
General of the Army.
Admiral of the Navy.
Members of national legislatures of foreign countries.
Private secretaries of Senators, duly appointed in writing; and the Librarian of Congress.
Hon. George Bancroft.
Judges of the Court of Claims.

2. No person shall be admitted to the floor as private secretary of a Senator until the Senator appointing him shall certify in writing to the Sergeant-at-Arms that he is actually employed for the performance of the duties of such secretary, and is engaged in the performance of the same.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to amend the rule by inserting "the Architect of the Capitol Extension." It is very often the case that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds desire to have him present here. I think there will be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the suggestion a very proper one, that the Architect of the Capitol should be one of the persons to whom the privileges of the floor may be extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. It has been suggested to me several times that it is a proper courtesy due to ex-members of the House of Representatives to admit them to the floor. I do not know whether the matter was before the committee or not. If it has been considered by them I do not care to offer any amendment.

Mr. HOAR. They are not admitted to the floor of the House itself except on the subscription of a certain certificate that they are not engaged in lobbying and have no interest in anything before Congress, which is an inconvenient and awkward thing to provide for in regard to so large a number of persons. I do not think it is worth while to change our rule.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not care to make any quibble about it, but my attention has been called to it several times. If the committee have considered the subject, I make no motion.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXV was read, as follows:

RULE XXXV.

REGULATION OF THE SENATE WING OF THE CAPITOL.

1. The Senate Chamber shall not be granted for any other purpose than for the use of the Senate.

2. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Rules to make all rules and regulations respecting such parts of the Capitol, its passages and galleries, including the restaurant, as are or may be set apart for the use of the Senate and its officers, to be enforced under the direction of the presiding officer. They shall, at the opening of each session of Congress, make such regulations respecting the reporters' gallery of the Senate as will confine its occupation to bona fide reporters for daily newspapers, assigning not to exceed one seat to each paper.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXVI was read, as follows:

RULE XXXVI.

SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

On a motion made and seconded to close the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a Senator, require secrecy, the presiding officer shall direct the galleries to be cleared; and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain closed.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXVII was read, as follows:

RULE XXXVII.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

1. When the President of the United States shall meet the Senate in the Senate Chamber for the consideration of executive business, he shall have a seat on the right of the presiding officer. When the Senate shall be convened by the President of the United States to any other place, the presiding officer of the Senate and the Senators shall attend at the place appointed, with the necessary officers of the Senate.

2. When acting upon confidential or executive business, the Senate Chamber shall be cleared of all persons except the Secretary, the Chief Clerk, the Principal Legislative Clerk, the Executive Clerk, the Minute and Journal Clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Assistant Doorkeeper, and such other officers as the presiding officer shall think necessary; and all such officers shall be sworn to secrecy.

3. All confidential communications made by the President of the United States to the Senate shall be by the Senators and the officers of the Senate kept secret; and all treaties which may be laid before the Senate, and all remarks, votes, and proceedings thereon shall also be kept secret until the Senate shall, by their resolution, take off the injunction of secrecy.

4. Any Senator or officer of the Senate who shall disclose the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable, if a Senator, to suffer expulsion from the body; and if an officer, to dismissal from the service of the Senate, and to punishment for contempt.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXVIII was read, as follows:

RULE XXXVIII.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—PROCEEDINGS ON TREATIES.

1. When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order, except to refer it to a committee, or to print it, in confidence, for the use of the Senate.

When a treaty is reported from a committee with or without amendment it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie one day for consideration; after which it may be read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, when it shall be proceeded with by articles, and the amendments reported by the committee shall be first acted upon, after which other amendments may be proposed; and when through with, the proceedings had as in Committee of the Whole shall be reported to the Senate, when the question shall be, if the treaty be amended, "Will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole?" And the amendments may be taken separately, or in gross, if no Senator shall object; after which new amendments may be proposed.

The decisions thus made shall be reduced to the form of a resolution of ratification, with or without amendments, as the case may be; which shall be proposed on a subsequent day, unless, by unanimous consent, the Senate determine otherwise; at which stage no amendment shall be received, unless by unanimous consent.

On the final question to advise and consent to the ratification in the form agreed to, the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present shall be necessary to determine it in the affirmative; but all other motions and questions upon a treaty shall be decided by a majority vote, except a motion to postpone indefinitely, which shall be decided by a vote of two-thirds.

2. Treaties transmitted by the President to the Senate for ratification shall be resumed at the second or any subsequent session of the same Congress at the stage in which they were left at the final adjournment of the session at which they were transmitted; but all proceedings on treaties shall terminate with the Congress, and they shall be resumed at the commencement of the next Congress as if no proceedings had previously been had thereon.

3. All treaties concluded with Indian tribes shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in its open or legislative session, unless the same shall be transmitted by the President to the Senate in confidence; in which case they shall be acted upon with closed doors.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XXXIX was read, as follows:

RULE XXXIX.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—PROCEEDINGS ON NOMINATIONS.

1. When nominations shall be made by the President of the United States to the Senate, they shall, unless otherwise ordered, be referred to appropriate committees; and the final question on every nomination shall be, "Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?" which question shall not be put on the same day on which the nomination is received, nor on the day on which it may be reported by a committee, unless by unanimous consent.

2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator, when acting upon nominations, concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any nomination, shall be kept secret. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret.

3. When a nomination is confirmed or rejected, any Senator voting in the majority may move for a reconsideration on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual executive session of the Senate; but if a notification of the confirmation or rejection of a nomination shall have been sent to the President before the expiration of the time within which a motion to reconsider may be made, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the President to return such notification to the Senate. Any motion to reconsider the vote on a nomination may be laid on the table without prejudice to the nomination, and shall be a final disposition of such motion.

4. Nominations confirmed or rejected by the Senate shall not be returned by the Secretary to the President until the expiration of the time limited for making a motion to reconsider the same, or while a motion to reconsider is pending, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate.

5. When the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all motions to reconsider a vote upon a nomination which has been confirmed or rejected by the Senate, which shall be pending at the time of taking such adjournment or recess, shall fall; and the Secretary shall return all such nominations to the President as confirmed or rejected by the Senate, as the case may be.

6. Nominations neither confirmed nor rejected during the session at which they are made shall not be acted upon at any succeeding session without being again made to the Senate by the President; and if the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President, and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XL was read, as follows:

RULE XL.

THE PRESIDENT FURNISHED WITH COPIES OF RECORDS OF EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

The President of the United States shall, from time to time, be furnished with an authenticated transcript of the executive records of the Senate, but no further extract from the Executive Journal shall be furnished by the Secretary, except by special order of the Senate; and no paper, except original treaties transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States and finally acted upon by the Senate, shall be delivered from the office of the Secretary without an order of the Senate for that purpose.

The rule was adopted.

Rule XLI was read, as follows:

RULE XLI.

SUSPENSION AND AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof. Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate, except as otherwise provided in clause 1, Rule XIII.

The rule was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate now, as in Committee of the Whole, has gone over all the rules, with certain exceptions, which will now be reported in their order. The clauses that have been passed over will now be stated in their order.

The Secretary read Rule VII, as follows:

RULE VII.

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS.

The presentation of the credentials of Senators-elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correcting of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] had an amendment which he proposed to offer, and I suggested that that be passed over so that he might offer the amendment there. It was touching the record of credentials.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

2. The Secretary shall keep a record of the certificates of the election of Senators by entering in a well-bound book kept for that purpose the date of election, the name of the person elected and the vote given at the election, the date of the certificate, the names of the governor and the secretary of state signing and countersigning the same, and the State from which such Senator is elected.

Mr. GARLAND. The point involved is a very simple one. It is found that the Secretary, of his own motion, or by some order made at some time or other, of which there is no record, has been in the habit of recording in full the various certificates of election. The Secretary, on looking at some certificate presented here at this session, brought it to me to know whether the whole of it should be recorded. It was a very lengthy certificate; I do not remember now from what State it came. It certainly imposed considerable labor upon the Secretary's office. I think the best plan would be to simply have an abstract or mere statement of the substance and material portions of the certificate; and with that view I offered the amendment to incorporate it as a permanent rule, requiring the recording of the substance of the certificate in each case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. LAPHAM. I repeat to the Senator from Arkansas the suggestion I made when the amendment was offered, that he insert after the governor and secretary of state the words "or other officers of the State," because the practice is not uniform.

Mr. GARLAND. The practice does not amount to anything. The act of Congress fixes this. The act of July, 1866, says the governor must sign and the secretary of state countersign. This is strictly in accordance with the act of Congress that regulates the subject.

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly certificates have been received since I have been a member of the body that had not that formality.

Mr. GARLAND. It is wrong since the act of July, 1866, because that act says the governor must sign and the secretary of state countersign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule as amended was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reservation will be reported.

The SECRETARY. Rule XVII, on page 15, "Amendments to appropriation bills."

Mr. FRYE. Those have been passed by consent until the conclusion of the consideration of the report of the committee touching the Senate rules, and I suppose it would not be well to take up those questions to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the rules have been gone over except those relating to appropriations and the committees.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not let the report of the committee be reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, that we may make one step in progress, with the reservation of the two rules the Senator has named, so that we can consider them to-morrow?

Mr. HALE. And go and finish the rest in the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes.

Mr. HALE. That will utilize the afternoon.

Mr. INGALLS. We can make that step in advance.

Mr. FRYE. I see no objection to that, if it can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that these rules be reported to the Senate with the reservation of the two rules named by him. Is that the request?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir; the reservation of Rule XVII and the rule touching standing committees.

Mr. INGALLS. It had better all be reported to the Senate, and then the reservation can be made in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (after a pause). The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules and have acted on all except two. It is now proposed that they be reported to the Senate for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas, and is that the proposition that the President of the Senate is putting to the body, that the rules be reported to the Senate, and then that the reservations be made in the Senate? I do not see how we can do that, because then it would take a majority vote to strike out what the committee has proposed, whereas, without it, it will take a majority vote to adopt it. It just reverses the affirmative. I understood the Senator from Maine to ask that these two rules be reserved without any action had upon them and the others be reported to the Senate; and then would action in the Senate on these rules be final?

Mr. INGALLS. It is about as broad as it is long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had some doubt whether a portion of the rules could be reported to the Senate and the rest left in committee. That would certainly be a novel practice. Therefore he understood the proposition of the Senator from Kansas to be to report all the rules to the Senate, with the statement, however, that the two rules named had not been fully considered and would be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not open for amendment, but open for adoption. I shall have to object to their being considered adopted, because then it takes a majority to undo them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair tried to state the proposition of the Senator from Kansas correctly. The question is on the proposition as stated. [Putting the question.] The rules are now open for amendment in the Senate. There are no amendments reserved. There have been many amendments adopted, and the vote will be taken on all the amendments if there is no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. All those to which there is no objection might be agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment to Rule XXVI, on page 23——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question must first be put on the adoption of the amendments made in committee. Are there any reservations? If not, the question will be taken on the adoption of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that Rules XVII and XXVI are reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are reserved for future amendment and consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 23, in the twenty-sixth rule, before the figure 2 in the last paragraph:

A committee on fisheries, to consist of seven Senators, to which shall be referred all matters relating to fish and fisheries, and all matters relating to animal industries.

I will say that I put in the last clause of the proposed amendment at the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina who is not in his seat to-day [Mr. BUTLER]. I see nothing in it that is at all inappropriate, although it might be considered perhaps some transgression upon the present jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture. I am not sure of that.

I do not care to elaborate the necessity for the adoption of this rule creating this new committee. In some remarks I made a while ago I had occasion to refer to the immense growth of this fishery industry in the United States since I have been in the Senate. We have a fish commission here organized by law, and it has no other protector and no one to look after its legislation now, I believe, except the Committee on Appropriations. They come here and make requests for appropriations, they get estimates for appropriations, and that committee considers every question, so far as I know, that is connected with the distribution of food-fishes among the people of the United States.

I can say for the people of my section of the country that they feel very greatly interested in this Fish Commission and in its labors. It is a part of the executive establishment of the Government of the United States which has won great renown in this country and abroad. It has had devoted to it the labors of some of the most eminent of our scientific as well as of our practical men. I suppose that no one country can boast of an individual who is doing more by his personal exertions to contribute to the increase of excellent food for the human family than we can in the person of Professor Baird, and I might add also in the able support he has from the gentlemen by whom he is surrounded. The work of the Fish Commission has increased enormously in the last five or six years, and there is scarcely a mail that comes to this city that does not bring earnest requests from the people in various sections of the country for a supply of fish, and questions are coming up continually in which the Government of the United States must necessarily take some part respecting the control of the fisheries in our bays, our inlets, and even upon our great rivers. I do not know whether it may become a question of practical importance in the Mississippi as it is in the Potomac River now, the control of the fisheries there by acts of Congress or otherwise; but no man can close his eyes to the magnitude of the question within those parts of the country where Congress may have jurisdiction, and I dare say it has jurisdiction in a very large proportion of the waters of the United States to some extent to control this question of the fisheries. Nothing can be more important, it seems to me, than the questions which have been presented for the consideration of State governments and the Congress of the United States on this subject.

I propose that we shall have a committee that shall address itself to this very important matter. It has become my duty, in some sense, to become acquainted with it recently, because I was assigned to a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations under the chairmanship of the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM], and had to make very extensive investigations in respect of it, and I confess that to me it was a great revelation. The importance and magnitude of this supply of food and the increase of it under the nurture of the Fish Commission is obvious and very great. It seems to me that it is one of the industries of this country that ought to be very carefully husbanded.

I will not submit any further remarks to the Senate on this subject, because it certainly is not new to them. They have all had opportunity to consider it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I suppose I was born a fisherman, for ever since I can remember I have been more expert in fishing than in anything else I know of, and there are few rivers in the eastern part of my State or in the Canadas that I have not whipped with my fly. Thirteen years ago I came to Congress with all the love for fishing on me. I had watched the private attempt made in State after State to stock lakes and rivers. I had seen the utter failure by reason of the failure of the States themselves to protect the work which had been done. For instance, take the Connecticut River, running through two or three States. The State of Connecticut might pass the necessary laws to protect; the State of Massachusetts might pass no law to protect, and all the work which had been done to propagate fish in the Connecticut River might in one season be destroyed in Massachusetts by the tyrant of the fish, there being no law in Massachusetts to restrain. It was so with many rivers, and Seth Green found the utmost difficulty attending the immense business he was undertaking from pure love of the business from this lack of uniformity of law.

I came to Congress, I say, fresh as a fisherman, and fresh from a study of this then new study of the propagation of fish, and I desire, Mr. President, to claim to myself the credit which I think nobody on earth has ever given me—and yet a man is entitled to credit where he actually does something and it ought to be given to him—I claim to myself the credit of first of any member of Congress going before the Appropriations Committee and insisting with them that they should make an appropriation touching this propagation of food-fish. I undertook to explain it somewhat to them. It was a new thought, a new business, and it was very difficult to satisfy them that something ought to be done. I sent for Professor Baird and I asked him to appear. He appeared, and having more strength than I fresh in Congress, he old in the business, under the joint labors of both of us the Appropriations Committee finally consented to give $10,000 towards propagating the fish and towards the discovery of the causes of the loss of fish on our coast. The bill was reported, I think, by Mr. Garfield to the House, and a Representative from Illinois, a very able man, General Farnsworth, immediately when this item was reached took the floor and proceeded to destroy it by ridicule, always a powerful weapon if carefully used. I remember he declared that if this was done, in less than ten years they would be calling for $25,000 a year for this business. I never had spoken in the House, and I confess the most alarming thing I ever saw in my life was myself on the floor of the House, and the most terrible noise I ever heard in my life was the first sound of my own voice there. I raised it in behalf of this appropriation, General Garfield turning it over to me, saying that he knew little or nothing about it. I defended the appropriation as well as I could. It passed the House, and as I went up to the rear to take a smoke and quiet my nerves after that unusual performance I met a distinguished, magnificent-looking gentleman, who would attract anybody's attention anywhere. He shook me by the hand and said, "Young man, you have planted infinitely better than you know, and instead of $25,000 in ten years from now, if Congress does not appropriate $200,000 a year I am mistaken." I inquired the name of the gentleman, and it was Professor Agassiz, and I am happy to say that I received my first commendation for the first work I ever did in the Congress of the United States from that distinguished professor.

The next year I appeared before the committee again, and they increased the appropriation; and from that second time up to now no man has been compelled to appear before the Appropriations Committee to obtain what was necessary to carry on the purposes of the original appropriation. Why, Mr. President, it was clearly apparent in less than two years that this whole Republic was getting two dollars, ay, five dollars, for every one that it expended, and to-day from all over this country, if any attempt were made to cut down that appropriation, would come serious, determined opposition.

The study of this business was a new study; it is to-day a new study; and the eyes that look down into the depths of the ocean and that look into our lakes and our rivers are seeing more than they ever dreamed they would see in this world of ours. The discoveries that are made are the most interesting of to-day; and whether a new committee is to take charge of this appropriation, of this investigation, or whether it shall remain with the Appropriations Committee, I have no doubt that the people of this country, who are the government of it, will justify to the fullest extent the claim I make that no appropriation is made by the Congress of the United States from which so great and so universal good comes as from this appropriation.

I did not rise to oppose the committee nor to favor it, but simply to take to myself the little meed of credit which it seems to me I am fairly entitled to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the last clause of the amendment referring to animal industry. I do not think that is appropriate. I think a committee on fish and fisheries would be appropriate, but not on animal industry.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that being stricken out. I put it in because I did not find the Senator from South Carolina in his seat, and he had made the suggestion to me and I thought it my duty to present it to the Senate in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama modify his amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are other reserved clauses of this rule. The Chair will receive any further amendments.

Mr. GARLAND. I was going to offer an amendment in the Senate to Rule I, but I prefer to go on with other questions if there are others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances these two rules ought not to be taken up until amendments to other rules are disposed of.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well; then I offer my amendment now to Rule I. I propose to add as a third clause to Rule I:

3. The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the chair; but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The matter has been sufficiently debated.

Mr. FRYE. The only difference between this and the rule which was rejected is that this makes the substitution for one day only and the rule rejected made it for three days. There was so much opposition developed to the rule of three days that two or three members of the committee have spoken to me, and have made the suggestion that probably on the whole it was just as well to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I shall not oppose the amendment he offers.

Mr. GARLAND. Then I do not want the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Arkansas the advisability of adding the words "except by unanimous consent."

Mr. GARLAND. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended. Do Senators desire that it be read again?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read again; the third clause only.

The Secretary read as follows:

3. The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the chair; but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment, except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine, who has charge of this matter, and that is in regard to the arrangement of the committees, the order in which they shall stand. I was going to suggest that they be arranged alphabetically. The position occupied by the committees now does not represent the importance or the comparative importance of any of the committees, and whenever any person desires to ascertain who the members of a particular committee are he must look through the whole list of committees before he can find that committee. I suppose the amendment would be more clerical than anything else, but the Secretary would not, of course, change the order of the committees unless he was authorized by vote of the Senate, or by an understanding of the Senate, that that might be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin submit that motion?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I believe I will submit the motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. To come in alphabetical order, first the Committee on Agriculture, then the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Commerce, &c.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That they be arranged alphabetically.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. Before that is done I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin. He will find on examination that these committees are listed according to the period of time at which they were made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. So I understand.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not know that it would be well to change that, because if we made a new committee to-morrow we should have to alter the list by putting it in alphabetically. There was no Committee on Elections until comparatively a short time since.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, which heads the list of committees, was not created until a few years ago.

Mr. GARLAND. So I have stated.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations is a committee of comparatively a late date.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the statement of the Senator from Arkansas be true, that committee lists are now made up according to the date at which each committee was formed, it does not hold true——

Mr. GARLAND. It does substantially.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no objection to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to let them come in alphabetical order, and hereafter if a new committee is formed it will take its place in its alphabetical order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Wisconsin that the committees be arranged in alphabetical order.

Mr. HOAR. Where does that come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is put in the nature of an order and does not come in the body of the rules.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator hardly desires to have a special clause in the rule in regard to printing a little document which is circulated, and if he wants to have anything in the rules——

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not care to have it in the rules.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator wants to have it in the rules at all, the best way would be to have Rule XXVI rearranged by changing the order of the paragraphs. I suggest to the Senator that he have a clerk do that, and when that rule which has been reserved, by reason of the absence of the Senator from Iowa, to be considered at a future day comes up, then to have that change made, and then the list will appear in the rules in alphabetical order. Then the little document which is distributed will follow the order of the rule. The clerk of the Committee on Rules can make up that order, to be ready when the rule is taken up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the chairman of the Committee on Rules will heed the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. FRYE. I will look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed order, the Chair understands, is withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE. Withdrawn, and at the request of the Senator I will ask the clerk of the Committee on Rules to draft a rule having the committees in their regular alphabetical order, and offer it as a substitute when final action comes on the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments proposed to the rules?

Mr. CONGER. What do I understand as to the consideration of Rule XXVI?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the rules have been passed except Rules XVII and XXVI, and they are now open for amendment. If amendments are not offered to them the question will be on the engrossment of these rules.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to suggest an amendment to Rule XXVI.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to say to the Senator from Michigan, who was absent, that these two rules touching the Appropriations Committee and touching the standing committees have been passed over by unanimous consent, and will not be taken up until to-morrow. They were passed over partly on account of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will simply make the suggestion for the consideration of the Senate when the question shall be taken up again. I propose to add after the words "a Committee on Agriculture" the words "and Forestry." The subject of forestry is a matter which has received considerable attention, and I think it would come in very well with the duties of that committee.

Mr. FRYE. That can be offered now.

Mr. CONGER. I offer that as an amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the clause in reference to the Committee on Agriculture be amended by adding "and Forestry" after "Agriculture." The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 7, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 24, 1883, was read and approved.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent to offer at this time, for adoption, a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which objections will be asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been alleged that circulars have been distributed in some of the Departments asking contributions for political purposes, in violation of the twelfth section of the civil service law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the heads of the Departments where such distribution of circulars has taken place, if any, be requested to inform the House of the facts connected with such distribution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPORTATION OF AMERICAN HOGS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of this House, if not incompatible with the public service, all communications, documents, and papers in his possession relating to the exclusion of and restrictions upon the importation of American hog products into Germany and France.

Mr. CANNON. Let me suggest to my colleague that he substitute the word "President" for the "Secretary of State." It is merely a change in the phraseology.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I shall otherwise be compelled to object to the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I accept the modification suggested by my colleague.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the resolution be read as modified.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE RULES.

Mr. RANDALL. Under instructions from the Committee on Rules I submit for the consideration and action of the House the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress for twenty days from this date, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that there are now pending before the Committee on Rules some amendments to the rules, but owing to the fact that all the members of the committee were not present this morning, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] being necessarily absent, we are unable to make a full report, and in lieu it is thought desirable to present this resolution for immediate adoption.

I ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the resolution he now submits should not make an exception of such portions of the rules as have already been modified and accepted by the House at its present session?

Mr. RANDALL. Speaking for myself alone, I should say yes; but there were considerations which prompted the Committee on Rules, or the members who are present this morning, to unanimously agree not to go further at present than to submit the resolution which has been read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then let me ask what would become of the amendments and changes made in the rules by the House at this present session?

Mr. RANDALL. Such action as the House has already taken with reference to the rules would, I presume, be excepted from the operation of this resolution. We do not repeal any rule heretofore adopted by the present House.

Mr. SPRINGER. But you commit the House, if the resolution is adopted, to the rules of the last House, without reference to our previous action here. In order that there may be no doubt about the matter a provision should be inserted in the resolution specifically excepting from its operation such portions of the rules as have been already adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. To what does the gentleman from Illinois refer?

Mr. SPRINGER. Such as the division of the Committee on Education and Labor into two committees, the change made with reference to the Committee on Commerce, and several others which do not occur to me at this time.

Mr. REED. The phraseology can be changed, I presume, if the resolution submitted by the Committee on Rules is open to the objection urged by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest that the resolution be modified by the insertion of the words "except in so far" as changed or modified in this House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the committee——

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment to the rules, which I ask to have read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, under instructions of the Committee on Rules, has demanded the previous question.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object to have the proposed amendment read for the information of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to its being read; but I have no authority from the committee to waive the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to Rule XXIV additional clause as follows:

"When any public bill or resolution shall have been referred to a committee, and the committee shall fail or refuse to report said bill or resolution back to the House of Representatives, either favorably or unfavorably, for thirty days, it shall be in order for the member who offered the bill or resolution, on any Monday immediately after the morning hour, to move to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill or resolution, and the House shall then dispose of the bill or resolution by recommittal or by final action, such as a majority of the House may determine."

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEIFER. Does that include the amendment just read?

The SPEAKER. The amendment has been simply read for information.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the point essential; but, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], I am quite willing, after conference with my associates on the committee, to add the words "as amended by the present House of Representatives."

The SPEAKER. The resolution as proposed to be modified will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress as amended by this House be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress for twenty days from this date, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Is the previous question now pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has demanded the previous question, and the Chair was about to take a vote on that motion when a modification of the resolution was suggested.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Are amendments being offered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and has modified his resolution accordingly. That is as the Chair understood it.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair is correct.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me a vote on my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to do so, but I have no authority from the committee.

The previous question was ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the resolution as modified was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I desire to offer a resolution for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read for information, after which the Chair will call for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is instructed to inquire and report to this House as early as practicable the number of employés, the character of their employment, the number of hours they are engaged in the public service, their compensation, and whether the convenience of members in the discharge of their public duties requires that they be diminished or increased.

2. They shall further inquire whether in minor committees the same clerk can not conveniently discharge the duties of two or more committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, and also resolutions of inquiry calling upon the heads of Departments for information for reference to their appropriate committees. Under this call joint and concurrent resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures are in order for reference.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to inquire whether when the call has begun it will continue until all the States and Territories shall have been called?

The SPEAKER. The call, under the rule, will continue until completed, if the House shall remain so long in session.

COMPENSATION OF PHYSICIANS.

Mr. PRYOR introduced a bill (H. R. 1763) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PRYOR. That bill should properly go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the rule it would go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PRYOR. Yes, sir; but I respectfully submit that on referring to the bill it will be seen it should properly go to the Committee on the Judiciary. It relates to judicial proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD L. KIRBY, JR.

Mr. PRYOR also introduced a bill (H. R. 1764) for the relief of Richard L. Kirby, jr.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HIRAM N. ROBERTS.

Mr. PRYOR also introduced a bill (H. R. 1765) for the relief of Hiram N. Roberts, as the administrator of the estate of Henry C. Roberts, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. MILAM.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST UNITED STATES PRODUCTS.

Mr. CALKINS introduced a bill (H. R. 1899) to prohibit imports from foreign governments who unjustly discriminate against the products of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CALKINS. I am uncertain whether this bill should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Committee on Commerce. I think, however, it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The same subject is now before the Committee on Ways and Means. I submit that is the proper reference.

Mr. CALKINS. This is essentially a retaliatory measure, and should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. A similar bill has been referred this morning to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALKINS. It is immaterial to me what committee shall take jurisdiction of this bill. I will accept the indication of the Chair as to the reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATIONS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. 1905) authorizing the President to prohibit by proclamation the importation of goods in certain cases; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in extenso.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes this bill should go to the Committee on Commerce, as it provides for the regulation of commerce.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A similar bill was introduced three weeks ago, and was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. In my judgment it belongs clearly to that committee. It is in regard to import duties and foreign commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it properly goes to the Committee on Commerce, but the gentleman can submit any motion he pleases.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1906) granting arrears of pensions to persons pensioned by special act, and repealing the proviso to section 2 of the act making appropriations for the payment of arrears of pensions, approved March 3, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCING ARMY PAY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1907) reducing the Pay Department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1908) authorizing the head of an Executive Department to require satisfactory evidence of qualifications and character before admitting a person to prosecute or defend proceedings therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1909) to repeal an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and in Washington Territory," approved June 3, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LOTTERY CIRCULARS, ETC.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1910) to prohibit the mailing of letters and circulars concerning lotteries, or newspapers or other periodical publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribe the penalty therefor; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Should it not go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The bill fixes a penalty for mailing letters containing lottery advertisements, and it belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary, as I think, under the rule. It is a statute creating an offense, and is within the definition of the criminal law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the two rules, one regulating the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary and the other regulating the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, this bill would go to the latter committee; but the gentleman may make a motion to refer to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It relates to the carriage of the mails.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is true, but it is equally true it creates a crime and affixes a penalty, and is a criminal statute, I think, to all intents and purposes.

Mr. KASSON. If the Chair will permit me to add, I believe it does not relate to the mails, but to the act of individuals, prohibiting them from depositing for carriage in the mails certain circulars and newspapers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to ask the Speaker what reference has been requested of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will of course be glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi upon the subject, as it relates to a proper construction of the rule.

Mr. MONEY. Bills of this character have been uniformly referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The legislation that has been heretofore had with reference to this and kindred subjects was legislation reported by that committee. There is nothing in the bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana that would give any committee jurisdiction of the subject other than the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I repeat that the subject-matter to which it relates has been uniformly referred to that committee, and under the rules of the House is clearly and exclusively within its jurisdiction. Further than that, Mr. Speaker, if such subjects are taken from that committee its business is practically at an end in this House.

Now, the bill which has just been read refers to the transmission of certain matters through the mails. There is no question, therefore, of construction, permit me to say, with all due deference to the gentleman from Indiana; but upon its very face it relates to matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of that committee, and should be referred to it and to none other. I will say further that subjects of a similar character have been already referred to that committee during the present session; and the committee should be able to report a general bill covering all such cases.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the Chair will indulge me——

The SPEAKER. Certainly, the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MONEY. Before the gentleman from Indiana proceeds I ask for the reading of a portion of the Digest on page 290, relating to the jurisdiction of committees.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The question of jurisdiction of committees over "proposed legislation," though apparently clearly determined by Rule IX, has frequently arisen in the House and will undoubtedly continue to arise in future Congresses. While it is sometimes difficult to decide upon the proper committee to which a bill or other proposition should be referred, an examination of its details will usually enable the Speaker (and House when appealed to or where required to vote on a motion to refer) to decide without difficulty upon the proper reference of the pending proposition. The general rule governing in such cases seems to have been, so far as can be ascertained, that the leading or principal subject of the bill should govern and control its reference. As, for instance, in a case where a bill related principally to revenue matters or the bonded debt, but contained sections authorizing or looking to certain judicial proceedings in connection therewith, it was held that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. So, in another case, where a bill related almost exclusively to the public domain, but contained sections proposing certain judicial proceedings in certain events and imposing additional duties on the Assistant Attorney-General for the Department of the Interior, it was held that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MONEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing whatever in this bill which takes it from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It is introduced in the usual manner, and under the clause of the Digest which has just been read its principal feature manifestly relates to the business of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It is proposed to exclude certain matters from the mails and to make it an offense for attempting to mail them. It is certainly therefore within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. This is the very matter over which the committee has jurisdiction and for which it was organized. I submit, therefore, that in view of the precedents—the uniform practice of the House—the proper reference is as I have indicated.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The rule is that all proposed legislation in regard to judicial proceedings, civil and criminal laws, shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Now, let us inquire for a moment what is the principal end to be attained by the proposed bill. It is simply to declare a misdemeanor the depositing in the post-office or postal car or letter-box of a publication of a particular description. It does not concern the carrying of the mails at all; but simply denounces as a crime the act of the individual who deposits in the mails a pamphlet, circular, newspaper, or letter concerning a lottery.

Suppose it were an act declaring it to be a crime to interfere with a letter in transit. Suppose it declared that to open a letter or abstract money from one, while in the post-office or postal car or in transit, was a felony and affixed a penalty for it. Would the gentleman insist that that was not purely a penal statute; and that simply because it referred to a letter in transit, or that the crime was committed on a letter in transit, for that reason alone it should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads?

If this bill provided that a letter-carrier should not receive or the United States mail should not transmit a publication of this particular description, it might with propriety be said to belong to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads, for then the subject-matter of the legislation would concern the transmission of the mails.

But I do not care to protract the discussion. This is simply no more and no less than declaring a particular thing to be a crime. That is all there is of it. That is its extent, and to say that it does not stand upon precisely the terms of other criminal legislation is to assume a position that I am not ready to concede by any manner of means. The fact that it declares a certain thing a crime does not certainly send the proposed legislation to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. The bill declares it shall be unlawful to convey by mail certain matters which are described in the bill itself. It is true that the bill provides that any person who attempts to deposit or does deposit this particular matter in the mail shall be punished; but the whole postal code is full of penalties for violation of its provisions. And the Chair thinks that in pursuance of the usual practice of the House heretofore, and upon what the Chair conceives to be a proper construction of these two rules, this bill should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. But the Chair will submit any motion the gentleman from Indiana desires to make about it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 60, noes 68.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REGISTERED LETTERS AND MONEY-ORDERS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. 1911) to amend sections 3929 and 4041 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the Postmaster-General to prohibit the delivery of registered letters and the payment of money-orders, and providing for the return of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 19th ultimo, submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Arickaree, Gros Ventre, and Mandan Indians on the Fort Berthold Indian reservation in Dakota, and the granting of patents therefor, and for other purposes.

The matter is presented for the action of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 7, 1884.

INDIAN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior of the 19th ultimo, submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill "to allow Indian homestead entries, in certain cases, without the payment of fees and commissions."

The matter is presented for the consideration and action of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 7, 1884.

CHANNEL AT SOUTH PASS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report showing the maintenance of the channel at the South Pass, Mississippi River, by Mr. James B. Eads, during the quarters ending March 9, 1883, June 9, 1883, September 9, 1883, and December 9, 1883, respectively, and also a report from the engineer's office in charge of the work, setting forth the necessity of an early appropriation to continue the examination required by the act of March 3, 1875.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication, with the accompanying papers, will be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

Mr. CONGER. The subject-matter of improving the South Pass of the Mississippi River has always been under the charge of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will change the reference then, and send the papers to that committee.

Mr. CONGER. But my impression is that, this being a report in accordance with the requirements of law on the condition of the Pass and asking for an appropriation to continue the examination which the law requires to be made by the Engineer Department of the depth and situation of the Pass, it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that this communication, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. It might go to the Committee on Commerce first for the recommendation of that committee.

Mr. HALE. I think those appropriations are considered by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. This is an appropriation required by the law which directs the Secretary of War to cause a quarterly examination of the condition of the Pass; but it might be referred to the Committee on Commerce for a report, if it is thought necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was at first under the impression that the matter of the outlet of the Mississippi River was in charge of the committee on that river, but he now understands that the outlet has been under the consideration of the Committee on Commerce. The proper reference the Chair therefore thinks of these papers is to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that all appropriations for rivers and harbors go to that committee, and do not go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a petition from the State Historical Society of Wisconsin. The petition sets forth that that society "warmly approves the proposed Centennial History of the United States Government as reported by the Committee of the Senate on Education and Labor" during the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and they pray that Congress may provide "for the publication of so important a work." I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I present the petition of R. K. Parks and others, officers of the Saint Charles Car Company, and citizens of Saint Charles, Mo., praying for the ratification of the proposed commercial treaty with Mexico. I suppose it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that memorials and papers relating to treaties should be presented in executive session, as separate journals are kept of the two branches of the work of the Senate. The Senator, therefore, will please withhold it until an executive session.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. CONGER presented a petition of members of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Michigan, praying that further rewards be given to the soldiers of the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of members of the Stationers' Board of Trade of New York, praying for the reduction of postage on all city and town letters from 2 cents to 1 cent; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Stationers' Board of Trade of New York City, praying for the passage of a national bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the memorial of a number of manufacturers and merchants of Wilmington, Del., in favor of the confirmation of the commercial treaty with Mexico. I ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Delaware that all papers of that kind are to be presented, under the rules, in executive session, as separate journals are kept of executive proceedings.

Mr. BAYARD. The fact being in this case that the Senate had ordered the publication of the treaty for the public consideration, I conceived it proper that there should be public reference to it in this way, because the Committee on Foreign Relations would feel itself discharged from the secrecy which usually attends executive communications of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that his suggestion was not based upon the fact that the treaty now is not secret in respect of its text, but that the rules require that separate journals of executive and legislative proceedings shall be kept, and therefore, as the petition relates to matters which are to be kept in the executive journal, which is not supposed to be in the actual possession of the Senate except in executive session, the Chair made the suggestion, as he did yesterday, which was acquiesced in by the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. I am aware of the fact. I withdraw the memorial, and merely note the fact to the Senate that I present the memorial as indicative of the public opinion of merchants and manufacturers on the subject of that treaty.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Haverhill, Mass., praying that Henry J. White, late of the Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, may be placed on the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 844) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 954) for the relief of F. Prosh and T. F. McElroy, of Olympia, Wash.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the bill should be referred to the Committee on Territories. It proposes to pay for printing and binding laws and documents of Washington Territory, which were supposed not to have been authorized by existing law, and the payment of which requires an appropriation.

Mr. HALE. Is not that a deficiency, under the statement of the Senator from Oregon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon suggests that it is an expenditure made without authority of law.

Mr. HALE. Then it would not be a deficiency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be a deficiency to carry out any existing law, under the statement of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I may have been incorrect in the statement I made. The work was done under a contract with the then secretary of the Territory, but I understand the Treasury Department declines to pay for it on the ground that it was not authorized by the Department, and that Congress alone can grant relief.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know whether it is to be included in the list of deficiencies sent in by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress?

Mr. DOLPH. I think not. I am not informed on the subject, however.

Mr. HALE. If not, then of course it ought not to go to the Committee on Appropriations; it is a claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred, on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 955) for the relief of Alfred Hopkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 956) for the relief of Patterson & Caldwell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 957) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 958) granting arrears of pension to Augustus D. Blanchet; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 959) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States," approved August 15, 1876; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 960) granting an increase of pension to Ann H. Cunningham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 961) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PUGH (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 962) to grant a pension to James M. Kirk; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 963) to place on the pension-roll the name of Philenda Carran, mother of Francis M. Carran, late private of Company B of the One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALKER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 964) for the relief of the widow and children of John Shirley, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 965) for the relief of Jane Latham Donelly, only surviving daughter and heir of Amos Latham, a soldier of the Revolutionary war; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 966) providing for the opening of a passage through San Carlos Bay and the improvement of the Caloosahatchie River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 967) to enable corporations to become sureties on official bonds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 968) for the relief of Fielding Hurst; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 969) for the relief of William J. Smith, late collector of customs for the port of Memphis, State of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 970) for the relief of Mrs. Julia Elliott, widow of Newell D. Elliott, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 971) for the relief of Mrs. Priscilla W. Burwell, widow of Armistead Burwell, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 972) for the relief of Priscilla W. Burwell, widow and personal representative of Hon. Armistead Burwell, late of Vicksburg, Miss., deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 973) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the estate of Francis H. Macleod for its corn and rice taken by the United States military forces; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

COST OF NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what was the original cost of all vessels whose names are found on the Naval Register for the year 1883, under the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Equipment and Recruiting, together with the total expense for all repairs since their construction, under the same bureaus, or otherwise.

NEW ORLEANS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution:

Whereas it is claimed by the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company that, as the Attorney-General has decided in favor of said company as to lands claimed by them and the Secretary of the Interior has felt constrained to act upon and accept said opinion and that Congress has no further control or authority over said lands or the claim of said company thereto: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to suspend action in issuing certificates or patents for said lands to said corporation until Congress at this session shall determine the questions involved in the claim of said corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule, and be printed.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for an order to print the usual number of copies of Senate bill 824. This is the bill to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia. The order for printing was withheld at my suggestion, thinking that a sufficient number of copies might be already remaining in the document-room, as the bill came over from the last session. Finding that the copies are insufficient, I ask that an order for printing the usual number of copies may be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered, on the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, if there be no objection.

COMMITTEE ON ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that two additional members be added to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that two additional members be appointed to constitute a part of the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, and asks for the present consideration of the motion. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion? The Chair hears none. The question is, will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the additional members of the committee just added on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that an order be entered that the two additional members on the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress be appointed by the Chair. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar of Resolutions is next in order under the rules. The Chair perceives that the first one on the Calendar was submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] not in his seat; the second by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] not in his seat, and the third by the present occupant of the chair, which is a matter not to be called up at this time. The Chair therefore will pass, without having them read at the desk, from the order of resolutions, if there be no objection, to the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the report of the Committee on Rules. [A pause]. The Chair is reminded that until 1 o'clock the Calendar of General Orders will be in order, but in order, as the Chair thinks, to facilitate business unless some Senator wishes to call up a special bill, he will lay before the Senate the unfinished business. There being no objection, the unfinished business is before the Senate, and the pending question is on agreeing to Rules XVII and XXVI, the Chair understands. Rule XVII, which was reserved, will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVII.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, and bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements; also amendments to bills establishing post-roads, proposing new post-roads, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; also amendments proposing new items of appropriations to bills for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to Rule XVII, which has just been read.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I understand that a modification has now been made relative to this rule by connecting it with Rule XXVI. Other motions have been made and notices given of still other motions to refer the appropriations relating to agriculture to the Committee on Agriculture, and perhaps the appropriations relating to military affairs to the Committee on Military Affairs, naval affairs to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I think the Post-Office Committee have suggested the same thing. I believe I am correct in that. The Senator from Maine recollects more accurately than I do. If I am right I desire to speak to the whole class of questions, as all involve the same principle.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, I think there have been but two formal motions made, one to refer the District of Columbia appropriation bill to the District Committee, which is offered by the Committee on Rules, and the other to refer the agricultural appropriation bill to the Committee on Agriculture, offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BECK. But several notices were given that other committees would claim the same rights.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. BECK. I regret the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON]. I learn, however, he is necessarily detained, and will be absent perhaps for some time to come, his father having died a day or two ago. In the absence of the chairman of that committee, as I am one of the oldest members upon it, I desire to state the reasons as briefly as I can why I object to the adoption of the rule as proposed. I shall speak of it as though all the other motions and notices were now before the Senate, so as to avoid repeating what I may desire to say as each one of them is respectively called up.

On the day we adjourned before the holidays I retained the floor to state my objection then to the single proposition as to the District of Columbia. As preliminary to what I desire to say now, and as part of my remarks, perhaps I had better read what I stated then. I said:

Mr. President, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations and have been for a good while, and as such I assure you that personally I care nothing about the District appropriation bill. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], now the acting President of the Senate, struck the real point that has been put by every committee to the Committee on Appropriations when it insists that it ought to be allowed to look over those matters. He asked the question if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations thought that other committees and other gentlemen on other committees were not as competent to do that work as they were. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have demanded jurisdiction over post-office matters, and have put the same question; the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has asked the same question, and done it in the same way; and so the Senator from Kansas tells us we did not understand all about that sewer. We were told by the Naval Committee: "You do not as members of the Appropriations Committee understand anything about the steel vessels we ought to build, and the thousand things that we learn on our committee." So the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads tells us: "Our intercourse with the Post-Office Department has given us information that you gentlemen can not have;" so say the Military Committee; so say all.

This is the beginning of a raid on the Appropriations Committee that if allowed to proceed can not be resisted, because each committee will claim that it has special knowledge and special information that the Committee on Appropriations does not have and can not have, because of the intimate relations of the various committees with the different Departments; and it will end in abolishing the Committee on Appropriations substantially. Perhaps that may be a good thing to do. It is a good way to get money out of the Treasury; there is no doubt about that.

Each committee of the Senate very properly is constituted so as to be the adviser of the particular Department whose interests are committed to its care. The Committee on the District of Columbia is composed of as good men as any other committee, for we are all alike good; and it is a rule that the men representing the States and districts nearest to the District of Columbia are always as a matter of right placed upon that committee. Why? Because they are supposed to be the special friends of the District.

At that point an interruption was had, and I consented to yield the floor for a motion to adjourn, which was very soon made.

Following that line of thought, I desire to say now that if any one of these committees, the Committee on the District of Columbia or the Committee on Agriculture for example, ought to have the appropriation bills relative to the matters they are expected to recommend legislation about referred to them, the Senate will find it very difficult to determine that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Pensions, indeed all the other committees dealing with any particular subject or class of subjects, shall not also have the appropriation bills relative to the particular matters in which they are concerned referred to them; because it must be admitted, and is admitted by each member of the Appropriation Committee, that the accurate knowledge necessary to pass laws bearing upon their respective Departments or matters specially committed to the charge of these committees is more familiar to them in the aggregate than it can be to the Appropriations Committee as a whole. But it is just for that reason that supervision over the money sought to be appropriated should be had by a committee not connected with any of these matters.

As I said before, in selecting committees to attend to the interests of the different Departments gentlemen are selected because of their special knowledge of and intimacy with the matters referred to them and the confidence of the heads of Departments in them. The gentlemen of the Senate who are on the Military Committee are, most of them at least, men who have been soldiers. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is the chairman of that committee. The gentlemen who have charge of other special matters are men who know more than other people about the special matters referred to them. The District of Columbia Committee, as I said, is always represented in large part by persons who are supposed to be specially friendly to the people and the interests of this District, and it is so now. You will observe in looking over the list of committees that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is a member of the Committee of the District of Columbia, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is also a member of that committee. Turning to the House, which follows the same rule, Representative BARBOUR, who is from the adjoining district of Alexandria, is the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia; and Representative MCCOMAS, of Maryland, from the other adjoining district, is also a member of that committee; and so with each of them, properly, I repeat. The Secretary of State ought to have the men who are in accordance with his views and who are his personal friends to consult with in relation to our foreign affairs and the confirmation of his subordinates. So ought the Secretary of the Navy, so ought the Secretary of War, so ought the Postmaster-General, so ought the people of the District, so ought all of them. It is the duty of these committees to frame such laws as in their judgment will best promote the interests of their respective Departments, and when they do attend to that well they find a great deal of work to do. But if they are to make the appropriations also to carry out the laws they frame, then there is no supervision over their acts by any other body of men in the Senate. I insist that it is not wise legislation to vest any committee with absolute power as to the laws necessary and at the same time as to the amount of money necessary to carry those laws into effect.

The theory and practice of the Government has always been that when committees frame and pass laws the amounts to be appropriated to carry out the laws which have been framed and passed in the interest of the respective departments which they specially represent shall go before another body of men not specially connected with any of the departments of the Government and be carefully considered there. The Committee on Appropriations originates no bills, frames no laws, and has no appointments referred to it. I am speaking of it as acting under the rules, for I have no doubt those rules have been violated time and again, very frequently by amendments offered by other committees, much more frequently than by the action of that committee itself. Under the rules it can frame no law; it must make appropriations in accordance with existing laws that have been framed by the other committees and passed by Congress. It has to keep a record of all the appropriations and all the items of all the appropriations that have been passed, so that they can be seen by any Senator, who chooses to look over them, at once; and that committee has done so, as the books now on my desk will show to any one who cares to look at them.

How is the Committee on Appppropriations composed? I looked over the list of committees just now, and this is the condition exhibited: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], our chairman, is also a member of the Committee on Finance. Whatever questions come up in reference to internal revenue and the necessities of that branch of the service, he, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, is entirely familiar with them and can give the committee all the information requisite. I also am a member of the Committee on Finance, and can aid him in furnishing the necessary information relative to that branch of the public service, which is very important. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is the next member of the Committee on Appropriations; he is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. When any matter of appropriation comes up before the Committee on Appropriations relative to the Army, can any one be better qualified to advise as to what is necessary than the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He is thoroughly posted as to all matters relating to Indian affairs, and can advise the committee as to the necessities of that great interest.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is also a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is perhaps the best informed man in the Senate as to all matters relative to naval affairs. The interests of the Navy will never suffer while he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is a distinguished member of the Committee on Agriculture, and is also the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. If anything pertaining to agriculture is before the Committee on Appropriations we have all the information the Committee on Agriculture can give us in the person of the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is also a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and of the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. He is known to be extremely careful and well informed in all matters relating to any subject intrusted to his charge. Another of our members, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], is now a member and was, while the Democracy were in power here, chairman of the Committee on Commerce and also of the Committee on the Potomac Flats Improvement of Washington. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], also a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is upon the Committee on Patents and the Committee on Education and Labor. Therefore the nine men composing the Committee on Appropriations are in one form or other representatives of a large majority of the other special interests that have to be cared for.

I do not believe that the effort to take cognizance by special committee of the appropriations relative to the District of Columbia or to the Agricultural Department, or the Military or Navy, or any other department of the Government, is based upon the idea that the Committee on Appropriations are too extravagant in their appropriations for any of those things, or that it is now proposed to take any bill away from us for the purpose of curtailing extravagance or economizing expenditures in any of the different departments of the Government. I think if this movement succeeds that the reverse will be found to be the fact. I think the history of legislation in these halls will show that wherever amendments have been moved to appropriation bills as they came from the Committee on Appropriations by gentlemen representing any other of the great interests of the Government, whether military or naval or the District of Columbia or anything else, it has generally been asking an addition to an increase of appropriation over what the Committee on Appropriations had seen fit to allow; and I predict now that if this move is successful, and the Committee on Appropriations is abolished, as it will virtually be if all these motions carry—because I suppose if one shall carry all will—the result will be increased appropriations and a want of harmony, instead of strict economy and a thorough knowledge of all that has been done, and we shall have hereafter a good deal of extravagance in the management of our public affairs.

I called just now on the clerk of the committee to bring in all the books that I knew he had carefully prepared, in which every item of every appropriation made since 1870 in every bill is carefully collated. They are so kept that any member of the Senate can go into the room of the Committee on Appropriations and in five minutes can look and see what has been done for the last thirteen years at least—how much further back I do not know, but since 1870 I do know, for I have examined carefully—every item of every appropriation bill made outside of the river and harbor bills; he can ascertain any fact he seeks to know in a moment by the books kept by the secretary or clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, and I have the books now before me, so that any gentleman can verify my statement by looking at them. Surely that of itself is a great convenience. If it is taken from the Committee on Appropriations and the appropriation bills referred to the different committees, such books as I have lying before me now, invaluable for the purposes of information, never can be made up or preserved.

Allow me to refer to the action of the immediate representatives of the people on this question. The House of Representatives, through its Committee on Rules, two or three years ago, in revising their rules, not only left all general bills with the Appropriations Committee, but endeavored to place the river and harbor bill in charge of the Committee on Appropriations, after first referring it to the Committe on Commerce. The Committee on Rules made their report in 1879 on the 19th of December. It was a distinguished committee, one that had often considered all the matters connected with appropriations. It was composed of the then Speaker, Mr. RANDALL; Mr. Stephens, of Georgia; Mr. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky; Mr. Garfield, of Ohio; and Mr. FRYE, of Maine. They made a unanimous report, which I hold in my hand, and the language used by them meets my views so thoroughly that I will read it as my own:

> The Committee on Rules are of opinion, in consideration of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations are required under the rules "to report the general appropriation bills" (in which class the river and harbor appropriation bill should, by reason of long custom and practice, be included), that they should have entire charge of all those bills, in order that they might the more fairly and fully control the entire question of appropriation of revenue for carrying on the several departments of the Government. It follows as a logical sequence that, if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills, the interests therein involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made.
> For these reasons the Committee on Rules have made the foregoing recommendations with respect to the river and harbor bill, believing that no good or valid reason exists why the Committee on Commerce should originate and have complete control of the river and harbor bill that does not apply with equal force to the theory that the Committee on Military Affairs should originate and control the Army, the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval, the Committee on Indian Affairs the Indian, the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads the Post-Office, the Committee on Foreign Affairs the consular and diplomatic, or the Committee on Invalid Pensions the pension appropriation bill.

Without going into the history of it or finding fault with the action of the House, in regard to the river and harbor bill I may say that it has, from the time it was taken charge of by the Committee on Commerce, been passed in a very anomalous way, in nearly every case under a suspension of the rules, without any member being allowed to offer an amendment or to say one word against it. I see before me the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] who had charge of it the first time it was passed in that way, but I do not care to tell the pleasant conversation we then had in regard to the peculiar things in that bill which caused it to pass with such unanimity. I took the pains last night to look up the House debate on this subject, and I find that a great many wise suggestions were made by many well-informed men; among others, one of the Committee on Rules, General Garfield, of Ohio, used this language:

> There are two committees of this House that stand, if I may so speak, with their backs to each other and facing in opposite directions. One is the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee faces out upon all the business of this country from which a revenue can be had. They ask the nation this one question, Where can we get a revenue to supply the machinery of this Government, to fill the Treasury as it ought to be filled? And they apply to all of the people of this country, to all its wealth, to all its trade, to all its commerce, and ask what contributions shall be gathered and how they shall be gathered from the people.
> But that committee wants one thing before they start out upon this inquiry—they want the figures, the sum total. And they turn to the other committee which stands back to back to them, the Committee on Appropriations, and inquire of that committee how much money must we give you to run this Government for the coming year? And they get the figures from the Committee on Appropriations. That committee says to them, we will require so many millions of dollars. Thereupon the Committee of Ways and Means turns to the nation and asks for a contribution. It passes a law that tells how much the burden shall be and how that burden shall be distributed.

Now, if it is important that the Committee of Ways and Means shall know that sum total before they begin to legislate, it is equally important that some one great fiscal committee of this House shall be able to give them the figures. Now, shall it be given them by one committee, or shall the Committee of Ways and Means hunt through all the committees of this House in order to find out what the figure of our taxation is to be?

In my view, the harmony and unity of the fiscal machinery of this Government requires that these two great committees shall stand back to back; the one of them facing the people and its industries, the other facing the machinery of the Government and its necessities. One shall say that to run this great machine requires so much money in the aggregate, to be distributed in the following way. The other shall say that to get that aggregate of money requires such a tax internal and such a tax external, to be distributed in such and such manner. The unity of our fiscal affairs must not, therefore, be broken up.

I have in this statement given the reasons that induced me to agree to the report as presented in this Rule 10. The same reasoning that would turn over the river and harbor appropriation bill to the Committee on Commerce would also turn over the Army appropriation bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, the naval appropriation bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the pension appropriation bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and so on down through the whole list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact within the experience of every member who has been here long, that the Committee on Appropriations always finds itself confronted with a demand from each of the committees having a special subject in charge for larger appropriations than the Committee on Appropriations think should be made. There never was a time within my knowledge since I have been here when the Committee on Military Affairs did not resist the tendency of the Committee on Appropriations to cut down the appropriations for the Army. The Committee on Naval Affairs has always been found resisting the reduction of the naval appropriation bill. For this reason, I say that if each of these several committees had charge of getting up the appropriation bills on these several subjects, the amount of the bills would be very large; they would outgrow the grasp of the House, and there would be no unity in the appropriations of public money.

He was followed by the then Speaker of the House, Mr. RANDALL, who used this language:

But, Mr. Chairman, what I wish to say is this, that if you undertake to divide all these appropriations and have many committees, where there ought to be but one, you will enter upon a path of extravagance you can not foresee the length of or the depth of, until we will find the Treasury of the country bankrupt.

They were followed by others. I have made notes of the remarks made by many of the leading men of the House, agreeing, almost without exception, that the rule was that each of the special committees charged with special interests were demanding more than the Committee on Appropriations was willing to give, and that there would be no uniformity if they were allowed to control appropriations. One committee would succeed in getting more than its share, while another would get less than its proportion; trading, bickerings, and heart-burnings would follow, to the detriment of the public service. The Post-Office Committee, whose jurisdiction reaches all the people, or the Agricultural Committee, banking on its popularity by representing the farmers of the country, might get more than the Army or the Navy, which are not so popular in time of peace; whereas when the bills all went to one committee composed of gentlemen, some of whom are on the majority of the important committees, and are acting uniformly to see how the aggregate that can be afforded from the taxation imposed may be best distributed, doing justice to each one, ignoring none, giving none an advantage over others as far as they are able, then uniformity and equal justice would be obtained.

The House, with the exception of the Agricultural Committee, which because of some supposed popularity got its separate bill referred to it, agreed with the Committee on Rules, unless the river and harbor bill be considered an exception, and retained all the other appropriation bills in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee, if we differ with the House, send their conferees over here. When we go into conference after a disagreement they send the members of the same committee each time, as they have had the whole budget before them. They now meet the same committeemen from this Chamber, who are familiar with each bill and with the appropriations made in each bill, and know how far the Treasury can afford, under the taxation that is levied, to make appropriations for the expenses of the fiscal year. But if you divide these appropriation bills an extremely incongruous condition of things would follow; there could be no general view taken by our confrères, the post-office appropriations, the military appropriations, the naval apppropriations, and so on, would only be looked at, and each Department of the Government would be represented by a different body of men in each conference who are not advised as to any of the other appropriations which have been made, and have to begin at the beginning and get the appropriations of all the other Departments from the different committees in order to get the information before they can tell what is going to be anything like an approximation to the aggregate of the expenditures of the Government for any fiscal year.

For these reasons, among others, I think it would be a misfortune to break up the unity of the action of the two Houses, as these propositions, if carried, certainly will, because if one be taken away from the Appropriations Committee the others I assume will be.

It is claimed, however, by the Committee on the District of Columbia that there is a special reason why the District of Columbia appropriation bill should be excepted; or at least it was so claimed before the holiday adjournment. I am unable to see why it should be excepted, or why there is any special reason that should have induced the Committee on Rules to make that bill an exception. On the contrary, there would be more difficulty if that was made an exception than with any other bill, for the reason that these appropriations are paid half by the District and half by the General Government. At least all that goes into the District of Columbia bill is so paid. Other appropriations bearing upon the District, if not a part of its expenses, are provided for in the sundry civil bill. I hold the amounts appropriated for the current year in the two bills in my hand.

In the District of Columbia act we appropriated for—

Washington Asylum	$46,320
Georgetown Almshouse	1,800
Indigent insane of the District of Columbia in Government Hospital for Insane	46,700
Reform School, salaries $10,936 Reform School, subsistence 22,014	32,950
Relief of the poor	15,000
Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum	15,000
Women's Christian Association	5,000
National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children	7,000
Erection of building for same	20,000
Children's Hospital	5,000
Saint Ann's Infant Asylum	5,000
Industrial Home School	10,000
Church Orphanage of the District of Columbia	1,500
Total	211,270
Washington Aqueduct	20,000

Half of that is paid by the District and half by the Government. In the sundry civil act we appropriated $442,000 for matters bearing upon the District and to be expended in it—not perhaps all of them District matters, as follows:

Government Hospital for the Insane	$227,000
Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb	58,000
Howard University	15,500
Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum	50,000
Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, furniture, &c	5,000
Reform School (new barn, &c.)	7,500
Improving reservations and grounds	79,000
Total	442,000

This difficulty will occur if the Committee on the District of Columbia takes charge of the District bill: there will be a constant endeavor to throw as much of the appropriations necessary for the District into the sundry civil bill as possible, so as to make the Government pay them all and make the District of Columbia bill as small as possible, because the District has to pay half. On the other hand, the Committee on Appropriations, representing the United States, if you please, as against the views of those representing the District specially, will crowd as much as they possibly can into the District bill, to make the people here pay one-half, and keep as much from the sundry civil bill as they can, because the Government of the United States has to pay all that is there appropriated. That ought not to be. Two committees of the Senate ought not to be thrown into such antagonism with each other, and I do not quite like the suggestion which was made that these bills ought all to be referred first to the several committees, and then handed over to the Committee on Appropriations to be finally acted on. That was the way that was at first proposed to be done with the river and harbor bill in the House; it was to be handed over to the Committee on Commerce to be examined, and then to go to the Committee on Appropriations. Immediately the Committee on Commerce said: "Why should we hand a bill to another body who do not know as much as we do about it ourselves?" and they got it absolutely very soon, and have succeeded in passing it, under suspension of the rules, pretty much every year since.

The moment you hand over any of these bills to any of the special committees and the Committee on Appropriations see fit to recommend anything different from what the other committees have recommended, that committee, whether it be the Committee on Indian Affairs or on Military Affairs or on the District of Columbia, will at once say, "Here is a body of men who do not know as much as we do on this subject, who are undertaking to criticise and revise what we have said we need; we will take it ourselves, and we ought to have it;" and they will do so, just as the Committee on Commerce did with the river and harbor bill. I am stating what occurred in the House when I was there.

In short, we had better take the bills from it absolutely and abolish your Committee on Appropriations if Senators think there is to be anything saved by doing so. I should have no objection as a party man to trust the Committee on Appropriations of the House to-day with all the appropriation bills and let them send the various bills to Republican committees of this body, appointed to guard special interests, for their revision, and let them add what they see fit to them, and go before the country on the presentation made by a Democratic committee on appropriations representing all, and the Republican committees representing each of the different departments of this Government in their demands, and see where true economy would be. But I am looking to the proper prudent administration of the Government, seeking to secure harmony and economy in legislation, looking to the fact that there ought to be some place in this Government where all the appropriations are kept and where every Senator can see them at a glance. There is only one place, and no one supposes there is more, where men can go and ascertain them all, and where each interest is looked at regardless of any other except as all bear on each other, and that is a committee made up of men who originate no law, who can do nothing except to appropriate to carry out existing law, composed as I say of men who represent finance, military affairs, naval affairs, and so on. All the important committees are not represented, I admit. I believe the Post-Office Committee is not. The Military Committee is represented, the Indian Committee, the Naval Committee, the Agricultural Committee, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Patents, and other important committees are represented on the Appropriations Committee. I may add that the moment a bill comes over from the House of Representatives these committees can now, each and all of them, take hold of any matter relating to their jurisdiction, and frame and report any amendment they please to the Committee on Appropriations as well as they could if the bill should go to them first.

Let me suggest also that while at the long session of Congress no great difficulty might ensue, when we meet at the short session of Congress as we have to do every other year on the 1st of December and Congress expires by its own limitation on the 3d of March, how are we to get on practically? We have permitted the House to originate all appropriation bills—I do not say as a matter of right, but as a matter of fact. Most of those bills come to us during the last ten days of the session usually. If they have to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and others and be carefully examined by them, and then go to the Committee on Appropriations and be carefully examined by it, there will be very hasty and very badly considered legislation, because I assume that no gentleman desires after these committees have examined a bill and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations that it shall present anything on this floor without having all the explanations it can obtain with its members prepared on the floor of this House to defend their propositions when any exception to their action is taken by any one. They are compelled, if they do anything intelligently, to have all the time possible, and the House of Representatives gives us little enough time without having the bills to pass through other committees even for a day or a week. Some might be kept two weeks before they could get to the Committee on Appropriations, when they have all the work to do at any rate before they can report it intelligently to the Senate.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not exactly understand, having been absent, the present status of this proposition. Do I understand we are now in Committee of the Whole and that there has been a reservation?

Mr. BECK. The rules have been reported to the Senate, and there is a reservation of this Rule XVII and Rule XXVI, embracing not only the District of Columbia but all the other committees that may have appropriation bills referred to them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand the Senator, then, to be debating against the amendment already pending. I also understand he opposes the second one.

Mr. BECK. So far as it gives the District of Columbia Committee jurisdiction of the District appropriation bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. There are two exceptions, I find, in the first clause—one referring to the new Committee on Internal Improvements and the other referring to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Senator's objection applies to the District of Columbia Committee having charge of the District bill.

Mr. BECK. The District appropriation bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. But the Senator does not object to all matters relating to internal improvements being referred to the new Committee on Internal Improvements, to take the place of the old Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. I was not looking into that question specially; the division may be proper; but I desire to say, my attention being called to it, that the Committee on Commerce have much important work to do in aid of the work of the Committee on Appropriations this year, and I have no doubt they will pursue their labor in proper spirit. The Committee on Appropriations can originate no bill, as I have said, can do nothing except to act in accordance with existing law. The Committee on Appropriations for years has begged and pleaded with this body to change the laws in very many regards. I hold in my hand a bill that was reported by a leading member of that committee, providing that the indefinite appropriations now held in the Treasury should be brought under the supervision of the two Houses, which we have never succeeded in getting done. We have, wherever we could, shown that in the collection of internal revenue, in the collection of customs, hundreds of thousands of dollars were unnecessarily squandered upon unnecessary custom-houses and unnecessary employés, until the Secretary of the Treasury has at last conceded the fact in his report, from which I will only read a few words:

> There are useless customs districts, and nothing but local pride or interest will disagree therefrom. There are twenty-two ports of entry at which not a dollar of duties has been collected for years at different times. There are thirty-two ports of entry in which the year's collections from all sources have not equaled the year's expenses. These had importance when foreign trade was carried on in sailing vessels, and before the concentration of importations at large ports from regular lines of ocean steamers and the present system of rapid inland transportation. The custom-houses in these districts are, however, kept up, with all the formalities of activity, with deputies, inspectors, and clerks, to make official returns to the accounting officers of the Treasury and the Bureau of Statistics.

The Secretary tells us further that a large number of them ought to be abolished and all their machinery removed. The Committee on Commerce I hope will frame and pass a law not only going as far as the Secretary recommends, but beyond his recommendation, and will take up again the provision that the Committee on Appropriations have been urging so long, bringing all the indefinite appropriations before the Congress of the United States. The Secretary says it will reduce expenses $500,000 now to do what he asks. I tried to do it ten years ago, and at last the Secretary recommends it.

So with many things in regard to the Navy, so in regard to the Army, and so in regard to other matters. There is very important legislation that each of these committees has committed to its care, and when passed upon by them they can come before the Committee on Appropriations for money to carry them out, and the Committee on Appropriations, as far as I am advised—and I have been a member of it for six years in this House and for many years in the other House—always listens anxiously and carefully and attentively to all the suggestions and all the amendments and all the reasons given by members of the other committees having special charge of the interests upon which they are making their appropriations.

It surely must be better to allow one body of men to frame the laws and another to provide the appropriations to carry them out than to allow one set of men to frame the laws and that same body of men provide the appropriations to make them operative. It at least gives two bodies in the Senate a chance to understand all about these things; and if the committee that frames the laws sees that the Appropriations Committee is not making sufficient appropriations to carry them out in good faith, each member of that committee can on the floor of the Senate show wherein injustice has been done, and he will overrule the Committee on Appropriations, of course, and ought to do it.

This is the trouble about the move now made, it is in the wrong direction; it is a consolidation of all power in a single committee. If one committee frames the law and votes the money to carry it out, no other man in the Senate will know anything about it. The Agricultural Committee will frame the law and vote all the money they can, and no man not on that committee will know anything about it. So of the Post-Office Committee, so of the Naval Committee, so of the Military Committee, so of the District of Columbia Committee. They become autocrats, not only in the framing of the law, but in the appropriation of the people's money to carry it out; and outside of that committee-room no man can get the information to enable him to contradict what they say if they are wrong; and they are selected because they are special friends of the Department they are appointed to represent, for each Secretary ought to have men he can trust before whom he can present the wants of his Department here.

What is the direction we ought to move in, and that I hope the great party I have so long been connected with has been moving in? Checks and guards ought to be thrown around all official acts. Discretion should be restricted by positive laws, and no man or set of men should hold unrestricted power. We ought to have one committee a check upon another, one guard placed upon another, so that no body of men sitting as a committee of Congress shall have absolute power over the money of the people. We have lost untold millions, in my opinion, by the operation of laws relative to the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury, having the collection of the money and the disbursement of the money in one Department, and by having only one set of books, that no man can understand, that are obliged to balance, and are made to balance, right or wrong, so that there can be no discovery had. I have report after report, and some of them I intended to read to-day to show that even leading Republicans, and one committee, headed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], now our presiding officer, on the Treasury Department; another, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], and I were members; and another, in which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] acted for the Committee on Appropriations—all showing the want of responsibility in these matters and the impossibility of obtaining information.

The direction I now hope to move in is to let the committees of this House having charge of particular subjects frame their laws and pass them, then turn them over to a committee disconnected with them to make appropriations to carry them out. In this way two committees on this floor will act as a check on each other. One of the first things I did when I came to the Senate was to offer a resolution directing a committee to—

Report to the Senate whether or not the public interest would be promoted by a division of the Treasury Department into two distinct departments, the duties of one of which shall be to manage the collection of the revenues and hold them till ordered by law to pay them out; and the duties of the other shall be to manage the disbursement of the revenue collected and held by the other. If the committee determine to recommend such division of said Department, they may report a bill for that purpose.

I was assured by the then committee that something in that direction would be done. Until it is, we never shall have the money of the Treasury properly cared for. It will require the ablest man in this country and the ablest corps of assistants to construe all the laws relating to customs, all the laws relating to internal revenue, and look after all the great machinery necessary to bring the revenues of this country into the Treasury and hold them there; and then it will require another man, call him Chancellor of the Exchequer or anything you please, with another body of men as able as the first, to distribute that money to all the various Departments of the Government, and the one account to the other from a different set of books and both to Congress. There is not a decent grocery establishment or a wholesale or retail dry goods store in this country that would carry on its business as we are carrying on the business of this great Government now in our Treasury Department, with one set of books and all responsible to one head, and he with such a multiplicity of work to do that he has barely time to sign his name to such papers as some clerk has put a private mark on, indicating that he had looked at them.

Whenever we depart from the present system of legislation and say that the committee that have the right to frame the laws for the Navy, or the Army, or the District of Columbia, or the Post-Office, or any of the great Departments of the Government, shall at the same time declare what money is necessary to carry those laws into effect, and no other committee, no other member of this House, shall have the power or the opportunity to see whether they are right or wrong, then we are taking a step in a wrong direction and concealing from the great mass of the Senate and the great mass of the people the facts on which we act; but when one committee frames the law and another provides the money, the two committees will develop all the facts, so that the whole body of the Senate will understand what is the proper thing to do.

As I said, I have no feeling in this matter. I should perhaps not have said one word if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations were not necessarily absent; but I have consulted with him; I know his views as a member of the committee, and I felt it my duty to say what I have said. While I admit—and I wish that distinctly understood that I not only admit but I believe—that every other member of every other committee, whether of the District of Columbia, on Agriculture, the Post-Office, or any other committee, is as honest and as able and better informed as to his special matter than the members perhaps of the Committee on Appropriations in the aggregate, still it is not wise that the framing of laws and the voting of money to carry them out shall be united; and if you put them in the hands of a single committee, who will look over the aggregate, summon the different committees, reason together, and see what the Government, with the money produced by the taxes levied, can afford to expend, then the books of one committee will show what can be done with justice to all.

Mr. EDMUNDS (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). Mr. President, I wish to say that in the main part of the observations of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I entirely agree. I think it would be injurious to the interests of the Treasury and so to the interests of the people who supply the Treasury of the United States to send appropriation questions for reports of sums to be appropriated to the various committees that have charge of the classes of the public service about which appropriations must be made, and that the practical result would be, if we divide them up, that the sum total of appropriations would be enormously increased. If there be a standing order of the Senate which says that all appropriations respecting the judicial establishment of the United States should be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, the relations between the Committee on the Judiciary and the Department of Justice and the judicial establishment are of such an intimate and friendly character that we should be quite likely to be acting under a bias and to be more liberal in the money that we would recommend to be expended for the judicial establishment than a body of men not under such a bias would be likely to be. And I confess I do not see any distinction between the matter of the District of Columbia and any other of the various branches of the public service—the Army, the Navy, Indian affairs, post-offices and post-roads, public lands, and every one of the scores of separate subjects of public expenditure. I repeat I do not see any distinction between one and another.

If it be correct to send appropriations regarding the District of Columbia to that committee, so far as I can see it is perfectly correct to send all judicial appropriations to the Committee on the Judiciary, all naval appropriations to the Naval Committee, all military appropriations to the Military Committee, all Indian appropriations to the Indian Committee, and so on through the whole catalogue. I am fully persuaded that the aggregate of the separate bills, when we got to the end of a session of Congress, would be altogether beyond that which we now have; and I think we should find, in the main,—although there are and probably must be more or less deficiencies that we have to make up (in general they are small),—that the aggregate of the public expenditure would be largely increased, on account of the necessary fact in human nature that committees charged with particular subjects and in direct communication with particular branches of the public service get to be impressed with the ideas of the special Departments with which they have to do, and feel with the Departments that the public service would be better promoted with still larger appropriations to carry it on.

That is perfectly natural, perfectly reasonable in the philosophic sense, and is certain in my opinion to occur; and therefore, while I should be very glad to have the Judiciary Committee consider appropriations for the judicial establishment, because I think that the laws ought to be furnished with more money to carry them out and the judges ought to have higher pay, and the marshals and everybody else be provided with more funds, I do not think it would be for the public interest that the Committee on the Judiciary should be charged with reporting appropriations for that branch of the public service. If it is true as to the Committee on the Judiciary, I assume that it would be true as to all the other committees in this body.

I should hope, then, that we would adhere to the idea, with all the assistance we can get and suggestions from the several committees charged with the various branches of the public service, of having an independent committee, not charged with the administration of any particular branch of the public service, but only charged with following the law, providing for appropriations, have all these bills under their general charge grouped as they generally have been. That is my opinion, and I shall feel obliged, therefore, to vote with my friend from Kentucky to keep the appropriation bills (and I would extend it to appropriations for rivers and harbors, which have been by some custom sent to the Committee on Commerce) in the care of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I concur generally in the views expressed by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Vermont, but I say that the argument they make does not apply to the bill providing for the government of the District of Columbia. There is no comparison between the appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and the general appropriations for the Government of the United States. In the first place, the expenses of the Government of the United States are paid by the people of the United States out of the taxes levied upon the whole mass of the people, and, therefore, all the expenditures for the ordinary current expenses of the Government are properly appropriated by one committee. I think myself that the appropriations for rivers and harbors might properly be divided out by the Committee on Appropriations, but as the Committee on Commerce would necessarily have more knowledge of all the details of the items as to rivers and harbors, after long experience in both Houses of Congress it was finally settled that that particular bill should be consigned to the Committee on Commerce. It was because that committee necessarily had knowledge of the details in regard to those appropriations that the Committee on Appropriations could not have. But of all the bills that are presented in this body, the one that should not go to the Committee on Appropriations is the bill to provide for the expenses of the government of this District. The money collected for the government of this District is collected in the form of taxes from the people of this District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One-half of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. One-half, I know, and the other half is paid by the Government of the United States as owners of land and property in this District. In that respect the Government of the United States stands like myself or any other proprietor in this District. It is a taxpayer; it has agreed that in justice and equity it ought to pay one-half the expenses of the government of the District, because it owns one-half of the land and property in this District, and therefore it contributes its taxes just like any other tax-payer, whether greater or smaller. The Government of the United States is a tax-payer here. It levies and fixes the amount of its own tax, but it pays that money into the Treasury just like the Senator from Vermont and myself and any other tax-payer in this District.

Now, who should determine the mode of the expenditure of this money? Should it be the general committee having charge of the money of the United States which is collected from general taxes and applied to the various general expenses of the Government? Certainly not. It ought to be that committee of this body which represents the particular interests of the people of this District; it ought to be that body of gentlemen in this Chamber who have been selected to look after the material interests of the people of this District, the tax-payers of this District, the Government being one and the largest one among them.

It is no criticism upon the action of the Committee on Appropriations to say that the Committee on the District of Columbia is better fitted from its knowledge of the local wants of the people of this District to say how this money should be expended.

I agree with what has been said as to the tendency of dividing out the appropriation bills among different committees being to increase the expenditures; but that does not apply to the expenditures for this District, because the law fixes the amount of these expenditures; it is limited by the nature of the laws passed in regard to this District. We know beforehand how much will be the revenue of this District, because we know that the amount of tax is limited to 1½ per cent. on the taxable list, and that is provided for, fixed by law. So the amount of money to be expended for the people of this District is absolutely limited, and the appropriations to be made by the Committee on the District of Columbia are limited in precise terms. It is not so in regard to any other committee; it is not so in regard to any other expenditure. The Committee on Appropriations are limited, and so would the Committee on the District of Columbia be limited by laws which can not be amended except by both Houses of Congress. Therefore the argument about this increasing expenditures falls. The amount of expenditure is fixed, and the only question we have to determine is which committee on the whole could more fairly represent the local wants and interests of the people of this District.

I happen not to belong to either of these committees, and am entirely impartial; and yet since the debate on this subject the other day many citizens of the District, many leading tax-payers of the District, have spoken to me of their gratification that at last they had a body they could appear before and make known their local wants to. They said undoubtedly the Committee on Appropriations was a very able body, but it was pressed with greater affairs; the expenditure of $3,000,000 for the people of this District is a very unimportant thing to the Committee on Appropriations, but it is vital to the tax-payers of this District.

Here is a list of appropriations, not like the ordinary appropriations for the expenses of the Government, which are fixed by law. All that the Committee on Appropriations have to do is to look to the law and see how much should be appropriated, and then they carry that sum into their appropriation bills. But here is the government of a people where from the nature of things you can not set out in set form and set words what shall be expended from year to year. It is true that a large portion of the expenses can be defined, as the salaries of the commissioners and the salaries of the other officers, but the great body of the expenditures of a city government are for objects that can not be defined by law. For instance the estimates submitted to us provide for $530,000 to be expended on certain streets and highways. I believe it is about one-third of all the expenditures of the District of Columbia, excluding the interest on their debt. Now, where should that be expended? What streets should it be expended upon? Here is a detailed estimate naming A street, B street, C street, D street, and so on; the different kinds of improvements on the different streets. Who is best able to determine as to whether these matters suggested by the commissioners of the District of Columbia are wise or not; whether on the whole certain other improvements should not be made? Certainly that committee that is selected by this body to take charge of the local affairs of this District. The Committee on Appropriations can not have the requisite knowledge. Every bill that provides for this District goes to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they know necessarily and are bound to know about these local wants and local matters.

It seemed to me, therefore, especially where the amount to be appropriated was fixed by laws that cannot be changed except by an act of Congress, and particularly as this money is paid by the people of the District and by the United States as a tax-payer, our contribution depending upon the general good of the people of the District, including the smallest as well as the largest tax-payer, that the money ought to be divided out by the committee which has charge of the affairs of the District of Columbia. I can speak with absolute impartiality on this matter, because, though I do not belong to either committee, I have the common interest of all tax-payers here.

It must be remembered that the people of this District are in a very abnormal condition. They have absolutely no voice and no vote. They are taxed without representation. We govern them as absolutely as the worst despotism in the world can govern its people. We govern them, we hope, wisely; but, after all, the people of this District are subject to our will; they have no voice; they pay these taxes, this money is expended without their volition, and the only opportunity they have to say how their money shall be expended is by appealing to your generosity and your kindness. You have selected two committees to represent the people of the United States in saying how their taxes shall be paid out, and now you say that these two committees selected, one by each House, shall not pass upon these local matters with which they are bound to be familiar, but that a great committee, the Committee on Appropriations, that has charge of $300,000,000 of expenditures, shall at the last moment of a session of the Senate act upon them, and that the committee which has been all along during the session hearing their complaints and acting upon their local matters and local legislation here shall have nothing to do with directing the expenditure of the money, but only this committee that is overwhelmed with other important duties.

I say that this case stands on its own base. It is entirely to be distinguished from any other appropriation. I will not vote to transfer the naval appropriation bill to the Naval Committee, because these naval expenditures are fixed by law and the Naval Committee can report, if they choose, under our rules, amendments. Nor will I vote to carry the appropriations for agriculture to the Agricultural Committee. That is an interest represented by every man among us. But this local interest is not represented by us. What does a Senator know about the local interests of the people of this District, whether this alley or that street or some other place should be improved or not? We have not time to know; but the committee that has been selected to acquire this information must know, and therefore I think it is but reasonable and right to give to that committee the opportunity to present their view of how this money, kept distinct by law and limited by law, can best be distributed among the various objects of improvement so as to do to the people who pay those taxes the greatest possible good; and the mere fact that the Government of the United States is the largest tax-payer makes no difference at all, because the Committee on the District of Columbia of this body is just as much interested in the general good in the large sense as the Committee on Appropriations. It is true that if the Committee on the District of Columbia was not limited by law we might expend too much money for this District out of the general Treasury; but the amount that can possibly be expended is fixed by law, and if the Committee on the District of Columbia should report appropriations to an amount greater than the amount of the taxes and the contribution of the Government, the money would not be paid out of the Treasury, and therefore there is a complete safeguard against any extravagance of appropriation.

The general expression of opinion on the part of the people here, in the public press, by private tax-payers—they who have no power in the government of this district, but yet who pay all the taxes, for they, in common with the other proprietor, the Government of the United States, pay all the taxes—is that they feel gratified that at last they are to have an opportunity to come before some committee that holds the public purse of this District, so that they may make known their complaints where too much is given here and too little there, that this object is more important and that less important; and in that way they were at last to be represented in a committee of the Senate of the United States charged with the expenditure of the money collected in the form of taxes from the people of this District.

I need not say that my vote will not be guided by any want of confidence in the Committee on Appropriations. On the contrary, I shall vote against all amendments proposed to weaken the power of that committee. I believe that to relieve them from this local matter, about which they have not the requisite local information, would be a benefit to them, would be a satisfaction to the people of this District, and would enable the Committee on the District of Columbia to better apply the limited sum of money that is provided for carrying on the government of the District. I shall therefore vote for the rule as it now stands.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat I desire his attention for a moment. I heard him make a remark in reference to the want of information the Committee on Appropriations necessarily had as to the details of the street improvements and the more accurate information of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I went to the room of the Committee on Appropriations for a moment to look at the estimates of appropriations, and I find, on page 287, Class A, Class B, Class C, and Class D, asking for $409,552.22; and the Committee on Appropriations have never ventured, nor I suppose would the Committee on the District of Columbia venture, to indicate how that money should be expended, there being commissioners for that purpose. The provision of the law that we passed last year was:

> For work on sundry avenues and streets, and replacement of pavements on streets named in classes A, B, C, and D of Appendix Bb, annexed to the estimates of the commissioners of the District for 1884, $350,000.

The only limitation we placed upon it this year—it was not there before—was that certain work east of the Capitol should be finished, as complaint was made, and very properly made, that that poor end of the city had been more neglected than the other. So the details of the bill, when the Senator comes to look at it, he will find are not controlled by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that. I intended to call attention to it as the strongest argument I could make. It is true the commissioners set out in these tables the details as to certain streets and alleys and the improvements they propose to make. and the Committee on Appropriations have said, "Yes, we will give you one-half of what you estimate for these purposes, and do not undertake to tell what particular streets shall be improved." Make the change proposed, and then if the commissioners, who are but the officers of the Government of the United States and are in no sense the representatives of the people of this District, should make a classification that was not fair, it would enable the people of this District to say to the Committee on the District of Columbia that the classification contained in the list of the commissioners (not their officers, but their masters) is not a just and fair one, that it is not a just distribution of the money to be apportioned, "and therefore we do not want our money expended upon the estimate of commissioners not interested at all in our affairs, a majority of them non-residents of the District, you may say, in one sense, but we want to have the chance to appeal to a committee having charge of these matters, so that that committee may, if they see proper for sufficient reasons, change this classification and order of improvements."

There is wherein the Committee on Appropriations, necessarily, can not do the duty that is enjoined upon them. They can not go over these alleys and streets, many of which they never heard of, probably. Their duty does not require them to go into that kind of detail, while the duty of the Committee on the District of Columbia enables them to go into it. They have ample time and leisure to look and see whether the improvements proposed by the commissioners are the wisest and the best, and the people of this District who may have a different opinion about these improvements from the commissioners will have the right to go to a committee, who probably will make some change in the estimates proposed by the commissioners. It is a very small thing, it seems to me, for us to refuse to grant them what they desire of us in this particular. It is their money, and not ours, that is about to be appropriated and expended.

It seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations might feel a sense of relief when they are relieved from these mere local expenditures that occur here around them, and can devote themselves to the larger and greater expenditures of the whole people of the United States. It certainly should be our interest to give to the people who live here some semblance or form of power in their own government, in the disposition of their own money; and the mere fact that the people of this District, I believe by general accord, desire to have an opportunity to go before a special committee to inquire into and act upon their matters is itself a conclusive argument in my mind that this petition should be granted, because it is their money, and they ought to be allowed to choose the persons in this body, or the committee in this body, that shall divide and parcel out their money, limited as it is, and point out the objects of expenditure.

Sir, I would not do anything at all to weaken the restraint or power of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe that it is necessary, as my friend from Vermont says, to bring all the items of expenditure for the nation under the eye and control of one committee, so that they may limit the amount of expenditure. That only applies, however, to the general expenditures for the Government of the United States. The amount that the Government contributes as a tax-payer here is limited by law, and cannot be increased by the District; and the objects of expenditure ought to be under the eye and control of the committee that is selected by this body to manage the local affairs of the people of this District.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I do not think this is a matter affecting any committee or any member of this body personally, but it is just as much a question of general policy as any other that can come before the Senate. If I had been going to argue the question of the propriety of separating the appropriations and saying where I thought the least propriety existed in giving any committee separate jurisdiction of any item of appropriation, I should have said that that committee was the Committee on the District Columbia, for the reason that there is a contention always between the people of the District and the people of the United States, who pay one-half of all the expenses here, as to this ratio and relation; and all the people of this country deserve to be especially represented in regard to the affairs of this District. The country is dealing liberally, and so far as I know the impression outside is much too liberally, with this District in the matter of the proportion of taxes which it pays. I do not say myself that this proportion is improper; I accept it as fixed by law, but it is a question which can be disturbed every session of Congress by the action of the Appropriations Committee. The mere shifting of one item out of the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia into the sundry civil bill or some other bill disturbs materially the proportion which the Government of the United States is to pay of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

No one, I think, desires to prevent in any way anything that is necessary for the development of the District; but if there are people, as the Senator from Ohio says, who are specially interested in this particular thing because of the fact that they are tax-payers in this District, whether they be officers of the General Government or not, it seems to me that it must be because they want the Government to pay more of the taxes of this District than it is now paying. I do not say that that might not be proper. All I say is that if we are to shift this ratio, if we are to pay more of these taxes, if we are to have a different arrangement of the relation existing between the District and the people of the United States in reference to the payment of taxes, that ought to be settled by itself and not indirectly through the means of an appropriation bill.

The Committee on the District of Columbia now has that same jurisdiction over the detailed affairs of this District that the Post-Office Committee has over the multifarious and vast details of the Post-Office Department. The Senator from Ohio says the Appropriations Committee can not tell how the appropriations for these streets have to be expended. We appropriate for more than one hundred and fifty thousand different items of appropriation in all the appropriation bills combined upon the recommendations of executive officers. We can not go into the Treasury Department or any other Department of this Government and tell that the porters and the clerks appropriated for are all in their places and that the money we appropriated for them is spent properly. We have got to take these things very largely on the discretion and the recommendation of the chief of the proper Department and the general laws that govern the employment of persons and the expenditure of the money. But the District Committee, if they want some other way to spend the money for the improvement of the streets and avenues and alleys and all the other items of expenditure of this District, can formulate and have passed a bill specifically providing how the money shall be spent, in what proportion, and then the function of the Appropriations Committee will simply be to take that up, ascertain what the law requires to be done, and make the appropriation necessary to carry it out. It is no more complex a problem than any other one which is involved in the appropriation of money, and by reason of the fact that the General Government pays for this community one-half of all its taxes and has the delicate relations that the Senator from Ohio has spoken of in reference to all its affairs, there is a double reason why the people who pay this money should themselves hold the purse and determine exactly how and for what objects the money shall be expended. If there is any reason for the sending of any appropriation bills to a specific committee, it does not apply with equal force to the District appropriation bill.

On the other hand, there are appropriations which might go well to the several other committees, at least for certain purposes, and if the rule is to be adopted it should be upon some rational plan, which shall aid the transaction of the business of the Senate in a sensible way, and shall result more nearly in a reflection of the will of this body and the general judgment in regard to the amount and character of the appropriations. If the appropriation bills when they come in could go, each item of them, to the committee having specific charge of the subject for their consideration, and they should be reported back by that committee with their recommendations and then go to the Appropriations Committee, we should have, I think, a system which would answer all the purposes, and in which all the ideas and all the plans and all the views of all the committees and of all the members of the Senate would have an equal chance for reflection.

I think, therefore, that there ought to be some plan whereby not only the District appropriation bill should go to the District Committee for advisory action, but it should go there and come back and be sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and so of the other appropriation bills, that if they do not literally go to the various committees when they come here they shall be considered as being referred to the several committees in such a way that they may take up and report to the Senate their view upon all propositions contained in them, and that they may then go to the Appropriations Committee, which shall have control of not only the various items of appropriation but of the sum total.

This is important, Mr. President, because while at this time whether we appropriate one million or five millions or twenty millions of money is no stress upon the Treasury because we have money coming in all the time more than enough to meet the expenses of the General Government, the time will come and ought to come under a healthy condition of things when we have paid off the debt, when our obligations are fixed and determined, when the question of the expenditure of half a million more or half a million less may be the difference between a surplus and a deficit; and for that reason every single appropriation bill ought to go to the one committee that can not only determine it in detail but can determine it in gross, and can say that this item or that item can be put on because we are going to have money enough for all these purposes or that it shall be cut off because it increases the total amount beyond the sum which is certain to come into the Treasury, and therefore run the risk of the Government having to go into the street and borrow money.

Every reason that affects the credit of the country, every reason that affects the economy of expenditure, everything that affects the just relations of the people of the United States to the people of this District, and vice versa, demands, I think, that in this particular case at least this bill ought to go where all other bills for the expenditure of the people's money go; but, as I said, I think there might be an adjustment of these differences of opinion which would result in great good, and that is to charge each committee, the Judiciary Committee with reference to its part, the Naval Committee with reference to its part, and so on all the way around, with a just and careful and prompt expression of their opinion in some authentic way in regard to those matters about which they might be supposed to have some special knowledge, and let the result go finally to one committee, that is to bring within bounds, with reference to the administration I have spoken of, the sum total of what is to be the national budget.

Therefore, Mr. President, not as expressing my ultimate judgment on this question of detail, but to some extent voicing this idea, I propose the following amendment to this Rule XVII:

That the general appropriation bills shall be referred as follows:

Making appropriations for the support of the Army, for the erection and repair of fortifications, and for the support of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs; appropriations for the payment of pensions, to the Pensions Committee; appropriations for the Navy and for the Naval Academy, to the Naval Committee; appropriations for the Post-Office Department, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to the Committee on Agriculture; appropriations for the Indian Bureau, to the Committee on Indian Affairs; appropriations for the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and the several items of appropriation contained in the remaining general appropriation bills, germane to the general jurisdiction of other committees of the Senate, shall be referred to such committees respectively. All such subjects of appropriation, and all appropriation bills so referred, shall be reported to the Senate by the committees to which referred, with proposed amendments, within one week of the date of such reference, and shall be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MORRILL. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted. It would evidently procrastinate the session of the two Houses for an indefinite period if we were to have all the committees report and wait until they did report before the Committee on Appropriations should have possession of the bills. My opinion is that the business of the two Houses has never been so well performed as it was before the former duties of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees were separated. One committee ought to have the charge not only of the receipts of the Government but of its disbursements; but it was found that in the short session one committee in each House could not dispose of all the business in proper season if it had charge both of revenue matters and of all the appropriations, and, therefore, it was thought best, very properly, to separate the business of appropriations by having an independent committee for its consideration. I do think that this independent Committee on Appropriations is so large that it will overlook the details of the business that may be referred to it upon every subject, and this does not deprive the other committees of their potential power. Whenever a subject is brought here they will have their legitimate influence, and if there is anything wrong in the appropriations proposed by the Committee on Appropriations they will be heard fully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to offer this amendment as a substitute for the whole rule?

Mr. PLUMB. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does it come in?

Mr. PLUMB. I want it to come in as a separate subdivision, but it will require, of course, if adopted, some amendment of the pending rule in order to make it harmonious. It is not necessary to perfect all the details in advance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair now understands the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am entirely opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas; yet at the same time I do not regret that he has offered it, because it serves to emphasize the error into which, I respectfully submit, the Committee on Rules have entered in proposing, even as far as they have, to commit to the two committees here named, Internal Improvements and the District of Columbia, the conjoint consideration, first, of general legislation of matters relating to the subject-matter respecting which the committee is generally charged, and, at the same time, the duty of appropriating money to carry into effect existing laws relating to those subjects. If there be one thing that the rules of the Senate have been questioned about, if there be one subject that has constantly been challenged in the Senate, it has been the offering of inappropriate amendments to appropriation bills; and if there be one form of legislation worse than another, it is the ingrafting of provisions of general law upon appropriation bills, and yet the same effect is produced when you shall combine the two under the name of either a legislative or an appropriation bill.

I concur very largely in what was said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and what was added by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I hope the Senate will not abandon the rule of legislation which enables the estimates of the Executive Departments to pass before a separate committee for the purpose of being examined with reference to the needs of existing law. I am very sure that, when the two functions shall be found combined in the same committee of general legislation and providing money to carry it into effect, the expenses of this Government will be found to be enormously increased.

When we speak of a system of checks and balances in powers, it is not the subject of distrust of the individuals in this body who may be charged with the performance of the duties of certain committees; it is simply that under the circumstances there is certainty by delay and there is increased security in having separate and distinct judgments upon the same subject-matter. Therefore, it is that I am glad that the error, or, as I may call it, the legislative vice proposed by the Senator from Kansas has been brought more emphatically and more broadly before the Senate by the amendment that he has offered; and I hope before the rule is accepted by the Senate that the amendments in italics proposed by the committee will of themselves be rejected.

I was disposed to believe that it were well to take the omnibus bill called the river and harbor bill, which has been the cause of so much scandal and of so much unwise legislation, in my judgment, and commit it, if you please, to a separate body. Certain it is that from one cause or another that bill seems to have swallowed up pretty much the energies of the Committee on Commerce, and very little legislation relating to commerce finds its way into the body or is considered, but everything is sacrificed to the river and harbor bill, that comes here at the end of the session and meets, I believe, the approbation of no one, although many and generally a majority find themselves constrained in some way to vote for it; but I think it would be better not even to create that separate committee; it would be better to let things go as they have, and allow the Committee on Commerce to continue in charge of this agglomeration of measures called a river and harbor bill and let it come in as a separate measure and be passed upon by them. I do not know that there is a necessity for creating a separate committee for that, although that does not fall within the line of disapproval which I have of connecting the double function of appropriation and general legislation in the same committee.

The Committee on Appropriations is not a committee of general legislation; it is nothing in the world but a committee of assessment; it is nothing but a committee to find, not whether the law is wise or right, but whether there is enough money to execute it as it stands. That is their function, no more and no less. When they go beyond it, they are assuming functions not intended for them, and when other committees shall assume their functions I think that there will be found want of wisdom in it. The recommendations and the reasons and the influence of every committee of this body can be perfectly retained in all their legitimate force in co-operation with the system of providing money to execute existing laws under the direction or suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore I am perfectly ready to add my vote in opposition to these innovations proposed now for the first time in my knowledge in the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the original proposition of the Committee on Rules, to send the particular appropriation bill for the District of Columbia to that committee in this body, seems to me to be quite a different proposition from that to refer each of the appropriation bills to different committees of the Senate, and then after their deliberating upon them to refer them to the Committee on Appropriations. Whether that particular bill should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia must largely be determined, I think, upon a proper distribution of labor in this body among the different committees. I do not know of anything that would come before the Committee on the District of Columbia, if this bill should be referred to that committee, that could not be as properly and as wisely considered by the Committee on Appropriations, provided the Committee on Appropriations had as much time to devote to its consideration as the Committee on the District of Columbia. Nothing in the constitution of either committee, in my opinion, would of itself indicate to which committee it would be wise to send that bill. Either committee has just as much knowledge, to begin with, of the necessities of the appropriation, the wisdom of it, and the economy of it, as the other. Neither of them comes into its place as a committee with any special knowledge upon the subject. Either of them must go through with precisely the same examination in detail, if they do their duty, that the other must, and it is only a question which of them in the distribution of the duties among committees will have the best opportunity.

But whether the appropriation bills shall be distributed around among the different committees before coming to the Committee on Appropriations, or whether they shall be distributed around and then reported, as was originally contemplated with that for the District of Columbia and for rivers and harbors, directly to the Senate for its consideration from some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations, is quite another question.

I think with the Senator from Vermont who last spoke [Mr. MORRILL], that it was a misfortune when it came to be necessary to separate the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, when that committee which considered the resources and receipts of the Government was unable also at the same time to consider and determine upon the expenditures of the Government. For seventy years or more the Government was administered upon the idea that the receipts and expenditures of the Government should be considered in both branches by one and the same committee, and they were, I think no one can doubt, more wisely and economically administered under that system than under any other possibly devised. There can be no considerable expenditure of money in the Government that does not have its proper relation to the receipts of the Government and be determined in some measure by the receipts. What is in the Treasury, what is coming into the Treasury, and what is to be expended out of the Treasury, are questions which ought to come under one general eye and one supervision as far as possible.

I admit that when the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means were separated and a new Committee on Appropriations was created in the other branch and also here, it was a necessity. The great amount of the business necessary to be considered as the country grew and as the war brought new and great questions to be decided with rapidity and upon the moment, made it absolutely necessary, and there has been no time and no possibility since that they could be united. And just so far as we do depart from that idea, that they are a unity, it is a defect; it results in larger expenditure and in my opinion in a less careful scrutiny. Every special committee, if I may so style the standing committees, to which the appropriation bills shall be distributed has its specialty to amplify its jurisdiction and to accomplish more for its specialty than its predecessor has done, and I have never known the instance where such a reference has been made that the committee has ever come back with a bill that commended it to consideration because it had been cut down. When in the other branch they succeeded in having the agricultural bill taken from the control of the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee on Agriculture it was doubled in amount. It went on increasing, and it has gone on from that very reference to this day; and so it will be with every particular appropriation bill which goes to any other committee, especially a committee that has the general subject of legislation upon any particular branch of the public service committed to it; if you put along with it the appropriations for that branch they will legislate and appropriate at the same time.

That brings me to one great defect in this report of the Committee on Rules. They have done nothing to meet the great difficulty, that while one branch is permitted by its rules to incorporate into an appropriation bill matters of independent legislation you can not in the other branch even amend the legislation which comes here. You can not offer an amendment to independent legislation in an appropriation bill which comes, under the rules of the other branch, before us, and there has been no attempt in this report, as far as I am able to discover, to meet that difficulty. Under that vice, if I may use that word without any offense, under that error, that difficulty, more trouble arises in appropriation bills, more measures are pushed through by the money power behind them in an appropriation bill, more objectionable features of independent legislation go upon the statute-book, than by any other method resorted to in Congress. It has by that new feature of it which has sprung up within a few years been made more dangerous to legislate, one branch having by its rules provided that independent legislation, without regard to its character or its extent, may be incorporated into an appropriation bill and be carried by the necessities of appropriations through that branch and brought into the other, where it can not under the rules of the body where it is sent be even amended; it must be rejected in toto or taken as a whole. We do not meet by any means the demands upon either branch for the amendment of their rules in reference to appropriations.

I think the Senate will find it has made a very great mistake if it goes any further than existing rules as to the reference of the different appropriation bills, if it does not hold them just as far as it can under the control of a single committee, responsible to the body and to the country for the aggregate as well as for details; a committee whose duty it is to survey the whole field when they consider any particular appropriation bill. I say this proposition to refer the river and harbor bill to a particular committee separate from the Committee on Commerce will not meet that to which I think there is a response in the country; it will disappoint those who think that by thus doing they are going to cut down river and harbor bills. That is not the way to do it. I am not one of those who join in the cry against just and proper and ample and large appropriations for rivers and harbors, but I do not want to see such a bill magnified, swollen, extended, to objects not proper to be expressed within it, which has brought all this scandal on river and harbor bills heretofore, by the ambition of any committee to which it may be referred. I would rather see it take the general course of all appropriation bills, and let the amount appropriate for particular improvements, for great public works, be measured and determined by a fair view of the whole field, by a proper consideration of the entire amount of receipts and the amount of expenditures for other matters, and let other matters be determined also by the amount proper to be appropriated for these great and important duties devolved upon the Government. The improper features of the appropriation bills, that one in particular, do not creep into them, if my experience teaches me anything, from the regular committees. The proper Committees on Appropriations of the two bodies cut down bills; they scrutinize; it is their duty to do so. They are responsible to their respective bodies for the reports they make as a whole, while each separate committee is responsible only for the particular bill referred to it, and does not consider it with the aggregate, for it does not have the aggregate before it.

With the exception of the bill in reference to the District of Columbia, and I should rather see that kept with the Committee on Appropriations, I trust that the Senate will go no further than that in taking away the appropriation bills from one committee and distributing them among the others, and dissipating the responsibility of the appropriation bills.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one criticism made by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] upon the action of the Committee on Rules it seems to me is not deserved by the committee. Of course to them, and to any man, the absurdity is apparent of the House of Representatives having power to send appropriation bills with general legislation over here, and under our rules no power on our part to amend that general legislation. It was discussed by the Committee on Rules and certain remedies were proposed, but every remedy which could be thought of in this particular Rule XVII appeared to the committee to be an invitation to the other House to continue that rule which permitted general legislation. Then the question came to the committee.

Is there any course open by which we can undertake in some way to prevent this general legislation? I think it is generally understood that there has been, even in the other House, a disposition growing against that rule which permits general legislation of almost every conceivable kind, allowing general legislation decreasing expenditures, and it was hoped by the committee that under a joint rule the other House to-day might consent that this whole matter should be governed and controlled. Therefore, on page 45 of this report, Rule IV of the joint rules proposed by the committee, there is a clause which provides against all general legislation on appropriation bills. If the Senate will send that to the House and the House shall agree to it, the whole trouble will be cured at once. If the Senate will send it to the House and the House shall disagree to it, and there shall be a compromise of some kind, there may be some healing in the result of that compromise. That is the only reason why the committee did not undertake in this rule itself to provide that where general legislation came over here on an appropriation bill there should be a right to amend it.

I desire to call the Senator's attention to another thing, because I do not wish him to get in opposition in advance to a measure which I think a great deal of, and for what I regard as a poor reason. The Senator thinks there will be no reduction of appropriations by sending the river and harbor bill to a separate committee. That was not what the Committee on Rules was after. The Committee on Rules was desirous to have some consideration given by the Committee on Commerce to commerce. The Senator was in the other branch long enough to know that from the day Congress met until the day it closed any consideration to any commercial question was an utter impossibility; that from the day Congress met until Congress adjourned the river and harbor bill, in the other branch at any rate, took every moment of the committee's time. If the action of the Senate committee does nothing more, if under the lead of the Senator from Massachusetts the proposed rule fails to be adopted by the Senate, it has directed the attention of the other branch to this very subject. The committee has been divided, and now I think some attention will be paid to questions of commerce, surely as important as the questions of rivers and harbors. It will not be a great while before the questions of rivers and harbors will be of little importance if we have no ships to sail into them.

Mr. President, I hope that we may have a vote. The presiding officer announced the pending question to be on the adoption of Rule XVII. My recollection is that the pending question should be on the adoption of the first amendment in clause 1. "Internal Improvements" having been passed over, by consent the words following, in italics, read:

And bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

That amendment was pending and was postponed, and I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas would not be in order in the form in which it was offered. It might be offered as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule, as the present occupant of the chair understands it, was reported as a whole, not as an amendment to any existing rule; so that the Chair thinks he was correct when he announced the question to be upon the adoption of Rule XVII. If he is mistaken, he will be very much obliged to the Senator from Maine for indicating wherein.

Mr. FRYE. I think the presiding officer is right and I am wrong, as a presiding officer is very apt to be.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that when this rule was under consideration I should move an amendment to it that the agricultural appropriation bill should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Afterward I understand that the Senator from Kansas entered that motion, and that that is one of the amendments now pending to this rule.

I do not desire to go into any general discussion of the propriety of sending the various appropriation bills to the committees which have under consideration the subjects of the various appropriation bills, but more particularly in regard to the reference of the appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department. It is, as we all know, impossible to put general legislation upon a general appropriation bill; and thus it is that many subjects of great importance to the farmers of this country and to the entire agricultural interest of the country are never reached in the course of the legislation of either of the two Houses.

The Department of Agriculture can scarcely be said to be fairly established. It is tentative in its character. Its duties are not thoroughly prescribed; its duties are changed from year to year by the legislation of the two Houses. The ordinary and regular expenses of the Department of Agriculture are very small, and could well be provided for in an ordinary appropriation bill; but the great interests of agriculture can not be cared for by a committee which has in charge all the expenditures of this great Government. Constantly subjects are coming up in this Department which require the expenditure of large sums of money for experimental purposes; and certainly it is not, as I have said, in the power of the Appropriations Committee to carefully and properly consider these interests.

At the present time we find that one of the great staple products of this country is to a large extent excluded by many of the European nations. I refer to the exclusion by Germany and France of the importation of American pork. This is a subject which requires careful consideration. I know that the Committee on Agriculture proposes to take up the question, and it may be able to prepare a bill which shall lead to a Government inspection of all food products exported from our country. As I understand from correspondence with the State Department, the principal reason given to-day by the German Government and by the French Government for the exclusion of our pork products is that we have no governmental inspection, that there is no guarantee that the pork has been honestly packed and that it is free from disease. If some action is not had upon this question a very large proportion of the farmers of our western country will be compelled to change their form of industry and give up entirely the raising of pork for foreign export.

Another question of great importance is that of cattle diseases and the protection of our great herds of cattle from pleuro-pneumonia, which has been brought before this body; but the Committee on Agriculture has been deprived of much of its old power; it has fallen, I may say, into disuse, and the members of the committee have found it impossible to accomplish anything, and have from year to year given less attention to these great and important subjects.

The House of Representatives (and I may speak of it here as a matter of history), in the Forty-sixth Congress, in the amendment of its rules, sent the agricultural appropriation bill to the Committee on Agriculture; and I think we have already seen beneficial effects from sending that bill to the Agricultural Committee of the House. It has resulted in several appropriations for experimental purposes, appropriations which could never have been obtained from the ordinary Appropriations Committee of either House. It has resulted in great benefit. My honored friend from Massachusetts told us that it had resulted in largely increasing the agricultural appropriation bill. I am glad to know that it has resulted in somewhat increasing it; but this great interest of the country to-day has a meager appropriation of about $200,000 out of a grand budget of nearly $400,000,000. That is the amount, as I am informed by one of the members of the Appropriations Committee.

I believe that half a million or a million dollars could not be better spent to-day than by a thoroughly organized and a thoroughly equipped agricultural department—a department which should go into original investigation and original experiment. We should be able to establish a bureau of animal industry; we should be able to organize a system of Government inspection for all our food products which are exported abroad; we should undoubtedly take important steps to prevent the introduction of diseases of animals into this country. In order that this may be done it might require an appropriation of $100,000, or $200,000, or half a million dollars; but if it should require the largest sum, certainly no money could be so well and so economically expended as money applied in that direction. But so long as this question shall be left to one great committee, which has under its charge the Army, the Navy, the Treasury Department, and all the great Departments of this Government, providing for their ordinary and regular wants, the Agricultural Department will never receive the consideration which its importance deserves.

While I do not desire to go into a general discussion of this question in regard to the other appropriation bills, I am frank to say from my observation in the two Houses of Congress that one of the chief reasons to-day why we have no efficient Navy, one reason why to-day we have no sufficient seacoast defenses, will be found in the simple fact that the two great committees upon military affairs and upon naval affairs have been deprived of all power in these matters. If the question of building a new and efficient Navy lay entirely in the hands of the Naval Committee, and they had the power under our rules to bring in a bill for the building of a Navy, and if they could appropriate money in such a bill, I have no doubt whatever that we should to-day have a Navy which would be at least equal to that of some of the minor nations of South America, and instead of all of our great cities upon the Atlantic coast and upon the Pacific coast being, as we are told by the military authorities, absolutely defenseless, we should have proper coast defenses. Certainly it can not be claimed that for a number of years past there has been any deficiency in the funds of this Government to do all the things which may be necessary.

If the only object of our Government and the only object of legislation is to prevent as much expenditure as possible, then it is quite proper that all these bills should go to one grand committee, and that they in their own individual wisdom should fix the limit of the amount which could be appropriated by the Government for carrying on its great works; and then the same committee in its wisdom should proceed to divide up the sum total among the various branches of the Government. But I believe that this country is able to do any and all things which may be necessary for the good of the whole nation. If it should be found necessary to expend large sums of money upon the rebuilding of the Navy, and if the present revenue is not sufficient, the country is able to raise a revenue which shall be sufficient. If it should be found necessary, and if it should be held to be wise by the two legislative bodies of the Government to appropriate large sums of money for our seacoast defenses, then I know that the country is able to expend all the money which may be required for that purpose. If the great industry of agriculture should require a paltry $500,000 or $1,000,000 to do something in the direction which I have indicated, of establishing an inspection of all food products to be exported and of doing something in the direction of protecting our farmers from the introduction of cattle diseases, I believe that we are able to do it and that we should do it; and I believe it would be wise legislation to provide all the money that may be necessary for those purposes. I do not believe at all that it is economy to limit our expenditures in those directions by any fixed or arbitrary sums which may be agreed upon by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, I believe that the Senate should at least go as far as it has already indicated by this report from the Committee on Rules, and that it should go still further, and particularly that it should refer the appropriation bills for the Agricultural Department to the Committee on Agriculture, in order that that committee may consider all these questions, for, as I have said before, the expenditures of the Agricultural Department are not like those of any other branches of the Government. The expenditures for the bureau itself are very small, but as to the expenditures which may be made in the direction of investigation and of experiment the demands are very large, and they should be made much larger than they have been heretofore.

I do not care to go into any general discussion of the other amendments which were offered by the Senator from Kansas in regard to referring all the appropriation bills to the different committees and having them reported back and then sending them to the Committee on Appropriations. That is a question which is certainly worthy of grave consideration. I do not feel that I have given that subject consideration enough to express an opinion upon it at this time. I do not understand that the question of referring the appropriations for rivers and harbors to the Internal Improvements Committee is now under consideration. I will inquire of the Senator who has this measure in charge if I am correct in that supposition, or I will make the inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. My colleague is not here. That has been reserved; it is not up at present.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That is not to be considered in this vote; so I understood. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce is not now present, and I know he is deeply interested in that, and will desire to discuss it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in order that we may reach a vote upon this subject in proper divisions, or what seems to me to be proper divisions, I will move that the words in the rule reported in clause 1 between the word "Improvements" in the fourth line and the words "District of Columbia" inclusive on the next line but one below, be stricken out, being these words:

> And bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

And I move also to strike out the lines which carry the same force in the lower part of the second clause:

> Also amendments proposing new items of appropriations to bills for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

That will bring the vote I suppose to what Senators desire to vote upon. I get that impression from listening to the discussion. I make that motion to amend, if it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order, as it is to perfect the text of the rule, and takes precedence of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate upon this question; it is not a new one either in this body or in the other body, where my colleague, the chairman of the committee reporting this rule, had somewhat long service. There never was the time there when there was not some form or condition of a struggle to shear the Committee on Appropriations of a large part of its power; it was a struggle that constantly came up. In the course of that debate, as everybody will see who has read it, and as is shown in the extracts from it read here by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], there was found, what will undoubtedly be found here, that there is a feeling on the part of other committees that the control of the money of the Government which is to be applied to any particular branch of the service should be in the hands of the committee raised to consider the interests and concerns of that Department. A Senator expressed it to me only a few moments ago quite epigrammatically. He said: "You give us power to legislate, but that is good for nothing without the money to carry it out." Of course it was precisely to meet that condition that one Committee on Appropriations was raised to consider all such subjects.

I know from my own experience that the tendency of the mind of a member of either of the other committees calling for appropriations each year—the Military or the Naval Committee (I will speak of the latter because I have had service upon that committee)—is to gain all the power in appropriating money possible, and connected with that is the unerring result of desiring to have the power to appropriate more money. There has never been any exception to that. I think few Senators will dispute the statement that if all the business of the Committee on Appropriations was taken from it and given to the several committees we should then be confronted with a general scramble upon the part of each committee for more money. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] urged that point much more forcibly and clearly than I can, and his experience, never a member of the Appropriations Committee, but belonging to other committees here, taught him that.

The Committee on Appropriations is liable to make great mistakes; there is no committee that is not; but it is so situated that it has no favoritism for any branch of the Government; it considers all. First, it determines, so far as in it lies, how much money in all shall be appropriated. In the work that is now going on in the other legislative branch of the Government, in the work that is laid out by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, one of the first things that will be considered by the moving spirits of that committee is, how much money can we afford to give for all the branches of the Government. If there is to be a movement in the interest of what is called economy, that is the fundamental question; that is first attacked, and that is a proposition in which the Committee on Appropriations has, as I have said, no favoritism. It does not want to unduly build up the Army; it does not want to extravagantly increase the Navy; it does not want to waste money on the Indian service; and so on throughout all the Departments; and so you get an action complete in itself, though, as I have said, by no means perfect. The tendency of the mind upon other committees, that is, of my own mind I know, is the other way. I am looking, if upon the Naval Committee, to that as a question of great importance. I do believe it to be. I do not think that there are many questions likely to come before this Congress of more immediate importance than that; and if I were guided only by my investigations and desires upon that committee, I know that my mind inevitably would run to a larger appropriation than it would if I was considering all the needs of all the branches of the Government. This is so apparent that it is trite to say it, and I need not urge it.

The Senator from New York who has just sat down, in speaking of his committee—an important committee, a committee touching the interests of millions of American people—said that there should be commissions, if need be investigations, as to the relation of our commerce, the exporting of different supplies of animal food to other countries—a great question, it may be, one of growing importance—and that they should have the money to do it with. There is no doubt of it. There never has been a time when every call of that kind was not most liberally responded to by the Committee on Appropriations, considering all branches. We have appropriated money for the investigation of every subject of that kind without stint I had almost said—commissions to consider the questions of metallic currency, postal conventions, all the great growing interests that came up in the fish-culture that was alluded to yesterday, because the committee is able to see that these are some of the needs of the Government

There is another thing which has occurred to me just now that seems to me an additional reason why we should proceed very carefully in the consideration of this question. The Committee on Appropriations in the Senate has within the last two years taken square and firm ground against the placing of legislation upon its bills. It has seen the evil of making appropriation bills the sluice-way for general legislation. It is happily so constituted that it is able to take that attitude and carry it out for the reason that it has no favoritism for one Department over another; and it can by its action divest itself of the power and the temptation to exercise the power of putting legislation upon the general appropriation bills because of its general jurisdiction over all appropriation bills for all the Departments. You, Mr. President, well remember how important it was considered in the last Congress. The Senator from Vermont who has spoken remembers that well. Nobody contributed to it more than he. It was considered an advance in the interests of good legislation; and that proposition was taken and maintained. But if you send the appropriation bills to the different committees on the different Departments that are charged also with legislation, you will find it to be almost or quite an impossibility that legislation shall be kept from those bills. The two need not and ought not to be mixed. There should be a committee that takes that position and maintains it and has nothing whatever to do with general legislation. I do not believe that a better formula for our legislation can be given here than that in these two propositions: the great departmental committees to consider, elaborate, perfect, and report the legislation necessary for those Departments, let them be ever so jealous in claiming the right to all that legislation; and then let there be one general committee that divests itself of all power to do that and appropriates the moneys from the general revenues of the Government. You have got in that a purer legislation, you have got a more economic result in your appropriations; and so it must have been considered by the great men who established these committees.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the whole of this question is properly determined by a consideration of what are the functions of the Committee on Appropriations. However important or unimportant, can they be dispensed with unless some better agency is found to promote the objects desired? It seems to me that the chief object of the Committee on Appropriations is to preserve a proper correspondence between the receipts and revenues of the government and its disbursements, its appropriations. How can that be done if each committee of the Senate has a right to fix the amount, so far as a committee can do it by a recommendation of the amount to be appropriated? Manifestly there can be no revising power by the Senate after the specific appropriation is fixed, if separate appropriation bills are to come from each committee. There can be no general aggregate presented by any agency whatever for the consideration of the Senate, and there can be no proportion preserved between the receipts, the revenues of the Government, and its disbursements. This, undoubtedly, is a necessary object, and one to which there can be no exception. If one committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia, has it, still the disproportion will exist. It is true there will be no great difference if that committee appropriates only a small amount, but the principle is unquestionably violated. It is necessary that there shall be a correspondence preserved between the amount of revenue received by the Government and the amount appropriated, and so far, as an incident, the Committee on Appropriations is vested with authority to make recommendations as to items of appropriation which are excessive, extravagant, or too little for the object proposed. That is a necessary incident of the great power of making such recommendations to the Senate as will preserve the proper proportion between the disbursements and the revenue of the Government.

The rule simply proposes, and so does the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, that a compulsory reference shall be made to the committee instead of a voluntary exercise of the power which the committees now possess, for every committee of this body has the complete power, of its own volition, to recommend to the Senate such appropriations within the sphere of its jurisdiction as it sees fit or thinks proper to recommend. The Committee on the District of Columbia has that power now, and if the rules be insufficient for that purpose, the proper remedy manifestly is to amend the rules so that the committee may make its recommendation at any time, either when the appropriation bill is pending or before. It is manifest, therefore, that the committees have all the power now that they would have then, unless this rule shall deprive the Committee on Appropriations of its entire function of supervising and revising the aggregate of appropriations submitted to the body.

The simple question is as to the necessity of a compulsory reference, when an appropriation bill comes here from the House of Representatives, to the several committees of the items of appropriations relating to the special objects and powers of each committee. It seems to me that this view of the case settles the question. There can be no proper agency but some committee which shall have power to make recommendations looking to an aggregate of the disbursements of the Government. There can be no such looking to an aggregate without a power of revision and of supervision of each particular item of appropriation, and that has been committed to the Committee on Appropriations.

I do not perceive that there is any force in the arguments which have been submitted to us, because the committees have now absolute power to make recommendations such as they see fit upon all the subjects within the jurisdiction of each committee. As I interpret the rules, a committee has power when an appropriation bill comes here to take every item of that appropriation bill, relating to the subjects within the jurisdiction of that committee, and either recommend the appropriation according to the bill or in excess of it or in diminution of it. The simple difference, as it appears to me, proposed by this rule, is that of a compulsory reference to a committee, except so far as the rule now stands without the amendment of the Senator from Kansas that it gives to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Internal Improvements the absolute right to recommend such appropriations as they see fit for the immediate action of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], pending which the Chair asks indulgence to submit some messages from the President of the United States.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL.

The following message from the President of the United States was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit a communication from the governor of the State of Illinois, with a copy of an act of the General Assembly of that State, tendering to the United States the cession of the Illinois and Michigan Canal upon condition that it shall be enlarged and maintained as a national water way for commercial purposes.

The proposed cession is an element of the subject which Congress had under consideration in directing by the act of August 2, 1882, a survey for a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin by the most practicable route to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, the canal to be not less than seventy feet wide at the water line, and not less than seven feet in depth of water, and with capacity for vessels of at least 280 tons burden; and also a survey of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and an estimate of the cost of enlarging it to the dimensions of the proposed canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River.

The surveys ordered in the above act have been completed and the report upon them is included in the last annual report of the Secretary of War, and a copy is herewith submitted. It is estimated in the report that by the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the construction of the proposed canal by the shortest route between Hennepin and the Mississippi River a direct and convenient thoroughfare for vessels of 280 tons burden may be opened from the Mississippi River to Lake Michigan at a cost of $8,110,286.65, and that the annual charge for maintenance would be $138,600.

It appears from these papers that the estimated yield of corn, wheat, and oats for 1882 in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, and Nebraska was more than a thousand million bushels. It is claimed that if the cheap water-transportation route which is now continuous from the Atlantic Ocean to Chicago is extended to the Upper Mississippi by such a canal, a great benefit in the reduction of freight charges would result to the people of the Upper Mississippi Valley, whose productions I have only partly noted, not only upon their own shipments, but upon the articles of commerce used by them, which are now taken from the Eastern States by water only as far as Chicago.

As a matter of great interest, especially to the citizens of that part of the country, I commend the general subject to your consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 8, 1884.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are there not accompanying papers?

Mr. CULLOM. My motion includes whatever papers accompany the message.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The papers also should be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be printed, with the accompanying papers, and referred to the Committee on Commerce if there be no objection. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith to the House of Representatives a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting the annual report of the Mississippi River Commission.

I take this occasion to invite the early attention of Congress to the continuation of the work on the Mississippi River which is being carried on under the plans of the commission. My sense of the importance of the improvement of this river, not only to the people of the Northwest but especially to the inhabitants of the Lower Mississippi Valley, has already been expressed in a special communication to the last Congress. The harvests of grain and cotton produced in the region bordering upon the Mississippi are so vast as to be of national importance, and the project now being executed for their cheap transportation should be sufficiently provided for.

The commission report that the results due to the still uncompleted works have been remarkable and give the highest encouragement for expecting the ultimate success of the improvement.

The act of August 2, 1882, appropriated $4,123,000 for the work on that part of the river below Cairo. The estimates of the commission already transmitted to Congress call for $3,000,000 for the continuation of the work below Cairo, and it appears from their report that all of the last appropriation available for active operations has been exhausted, and that there is urgently needed an immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue the work without loss of time, in view of the approach of the flood season, with its attendant dangers.

I therefore recommend to Congress the early passage of a separate bill on this subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 8, 1884.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of December 13, 1883, copies of all vouchers not heretofore communicated to the Senate audited by the First Auditor on account of expenses incurred by the Department of Justice since March 4, 1881; which was read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that those papers be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They should be referred in the end, I think, as they respect judicial matters, to the Committee on the Judiciary, but I have no objection to their being printed and lying on the table for the present.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will probably in the future have no objection to that disposition of the matter, but I thought it best at present that they should take the course I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

DETACHED ARMY SERVICE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of December 10, 1883, a statement of the names and rank of officers of the Army on detached service, &c., including officers on sick leave, &c.; which, on motion of Mr. PLUMB, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE WITH CUBA AND PORTO RICO.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish for the information of the Senate copies of any papers in his possession relative to any correspondence or negotiations with the Government of Spain upon the subject of discriminating duties upon commerce between the United States and Cuba and Porto Rico.

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to report to the Senate what legislation, if any, is necessary for the immediate carrying out of the proviso contained in the appropriation for improving the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, a part of chapter 375 of the laws passed by the Forty-seventh Congress, which proviso is in these words: "Provided, That the Secretary of War shall, without delay, cause the channel of the Lower Fox River, between Lake Winnebago and the upper Government dam at Appleton, to be restored to its natural width and capacity, and shall cause such changes and alterations to be made in the dams at Menasha and Appleton, not inconsistent with security to navigation, as may be necessary to reduce to and maintain the waters of Lake Winnebago and Lake Butte des Morts respectively at their natural height;" and to furnish such suggestions as may in his opinion be pertinent as to the method of carrying out said proviso, and what, if any, lands it is necessary to take and appropriate in order to carry out the same.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Isaac Polhamus, jr., and others, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Myra Clarke Gaines be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in relation to her claim, subject to the rules of the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PLATT. By the act of March 3, 1883, a joint commission was appointed to consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, and it was directed to report at a given day, and also to recommend legislation on the subject. The commission has met, and after a good deal of consultation and investigation has been unable to arrive at any such conclusion that it is able to agree upon any legislation. I, as chairman of the commission, present now the report of the commission, and move that it lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL ASSISTANT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to examine and report what legislation, if any, is necessary to restrict the appointment of special assistant attorneys and special agents or detectives in Department of Justice, and report by bill or otherwise.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr FRYE. I understand the report of the Committee on Rules to be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That remains the unfinished business. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 17 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 8, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, when

Mr. RYAN said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction of bills and joint resolutions be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The residue of the Journal having been read, the Journal was approved.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to designate the committees which in the judgment of the said Committee on Accounts should be allowed clerks for the present Congress under the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1884, and to report to the House without delay for its action thereon.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed or bound all documents for the use of said committee that they may deem necessary in connection with subjects in relation to appropriations being considered or to be considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. This, Mr. Speaker, is the usual resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 78) for the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000, in accordance with the urgent request of the Mississippi River commission, for the preservation, repair, and construction of certain works of said river; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PRACTICE IN PATENT SUITS.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 311) to regulate practice in patent suits.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in any suit hereafter brought, in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases, for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use, and not for sale, and not in any manufacturing process, if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of twenty dollars or over, the defendant shall recover costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant, at the time of such purchase or practical application, had actual knowledge or notice of the existence of such patent, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the suit: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States.

SEC. 2. That in all suits hereafter brought as aforesaid against a defendant other than a manufacturer or seller of such patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, the plaintiff shall, at the commencement of such suit, give a bond, to the approval of the clerk, with sufficient surety, to be conditioned that the plaintiff will pay all costs and attorneys' fees that may be adjuged against him; and if the defendant shall finally prevail in such suit, the court shall allow costs, and a reasonable sum, not exceeding $50, for counsel fees, to the defendant, which shall be recoverable by suit, in the name of the clerk, upon said bond, or by fee-bill on execution. A failure by the plaintiff to give such bond shall, on motion, be ground for dismissal of the suit.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. RICE and Mr. KELLEY objected.

Mr. VANCE. The Committee on Patents are preparing to consider that subject, and will no doubt report upon it during the present session.

Mr. CALKINS. The necessity for a measure of this kind is very urgent. [Cries of "Regular order."]

AID TO TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise to a privileged question. I have been directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged matter under the rule, which requires resolutions of inquiry referred to committees to be reported back within one week.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Congress has at various times since the 1st day of July, 1862, passed laws aiding in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines by the loan of United States bonds and grants of land; and

Whereas the operation of said telegraph lines for the Government and the public are inseparable from the operation of the railroad lines as a condition of said aid in bonds and lands: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the House whether any railroad company so aided has granted, or attempted to grant, to any other corporation or telegraph company any rights to operate the lines of telegraph belonging to said railroad company, so as to prevent the said railroad company from fully performing its duties to the Government and the public or from granting equal facilities in all respects to all persons and corporations without discrimination.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would like the gentleman to state the action of the committee to which the resolution has been referred.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have been unanimously directed to report the resolution back with a recommendation that it be adopted.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRITISH SPY IN POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to make a privileged report. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have unanimously directed me to report back without amendment the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been publicly and repeatedly stated in the public press that a British spy named M. E. O'Brien had been allowed to tamper with the American mails in the city of New York, and, known as such to the United States Inspector Newcome, was by him permitted to visit his office in the New York post-office, where he had apparently unlimited opportunity to tamper with and open the correspondence of American merchants and citizens, and where he laid his plans for entrapping those unfortunate men, some of them American citizens, who were recently tried in Liverpool and sentenced to imprisonment for life: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to examine into this matter and communicate to this House the facts and circumstances connected therewith, together with the correspondence relating thereto.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. MONEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair, in pursuance of the unanimous consent given yesterday, will resume the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to the manufacture of merchandise composed of or prepared from products of the soil.

Whereas the Declaration of Independence is based upon the broad principle that every person is endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, none of which can exist without that right of liberty of individual action and conduct which interferes with no rights of others and is the foundation of all civilized law; and

Whereas it is proposed to prevent the abuse of this highest right of every person by taking away the right itself, thereby furnishing an impetus to a complete revolution of the spirit of American institutions: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution:

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House provide that such erroneous references shall be corrected by placing the bills in the petition-box with a memorandum indicating the proper committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not know there was such a rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows, from Rule XXII, clause 2:

Petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

Mr. REAGAN. Does that apply to bills as well as petitions?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, bills proposing appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors are treated as petitions and must go into the box. The Chair, therefore, thinks this rule applies in spirit to bills as well as petitions.

Mr. REAGAN. That would be correct if these bills were now originally introduced; but they come back from a committee; and it seems to me some action by the House is required to discharge that committee from their consideration and make another reference.

The SPEAKER. The bills ought not to have been referred in open House, but should have been referred by placing them in the box. If the gentleman will return the bills to the Clerk the proper order will be made.

Mr. REAGAN. If a committee, by the action of the House, has acquired jurisdiction of a subject, how can that jurisdiction be taken away except by action of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has provided by rule that a committee shall be divested of jurisdiction of matters of this character which have been improperly referred to it.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

COMPENSATION OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise for the purpose of submitting a privileged report, the report of the joint committee appointed under the sundry civil bill of last session to report to Congress by bill or otherwise in respect to equalizing the salaries of employés of the House and the Senate. A part of this report so far as it is concurred in by the representatives of the Senate and the House ought, I believe, to go to the Committee on Appropriations. The residue of the report, which is made to this House by the House members of the commission, should I think go to the Committee on Accounts. I suggest such reference of the report.

Mr. RANDALL. You can not divide it in that way.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by resolution, referring so much as relates to a particular subject to one committee and so much as relates to another subject to another committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the report made by the members of the committee on the part of the House is concerned it refers only to the employés of the House, a subject over which the Committee on Accounts of the House has jurisdiction; and I suppose that it is in order to refer that much of the report to that committee. I will make that motion, that that part united in by the Senate and House members of the commission be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that the part agreed to by the members of the House be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the report be printed.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let us have the report read now.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely willing it should be printed or read, as the case may be.

Mr. RANDALL. It is, I understand, a practical disagreement, and I hope the gentleman will have the report printed in the RECORD and let it go over for the present.

Mr. COX, of New York. It can be printed in the morning.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not a disagreement; they agree to disagree [laughter] so far as equalizing the salaries of the employés of the House and Senate is concerned. But the House members went further, and made recommendations for an increase of the force in the Clerk's office as well as others, which we deem it proper should go to the Committee on Accounts. So far as it refers to the salaries of the employés of the two Houses, the members of the Senate and the House could not agree.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the report a long one?

Mr. HISCOCK. Not very.

Mr. RANDALL. In order that the House may be well advised on the subject, I suggest that the report go over for the present, so that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HISCOCK. I consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued.

The report is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, appointed by the act of March 3, 1883, a joint commission to consider during the recess of Congress the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and the employés of the Senate and House, respectively, and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, and directing it to report to the two Houses on the second Monday in December, 1883, their conclusions with reference to the whole subject, and to recommend legislation respecting the same if, in their judgment, such legislation is necessary—the time for such report having been extended by joint resolution until the 10th day of January, 1884—submit the following report:

The commission finds that the question of the number of officers and employés necessary to transact the business of the two Houses, respectively, and the compensation which should be paid them, has been for many years a subject of controversy. The House has from time to time insisted that the officers and employés of the Senate were too many in number and received for the services rendered by them a greater compensation than that received by the officers and employés of the House for similar services. The Senate, on the other hand, has contended that the number of its officers and employés was not greater than required for the prompt and accurate dispatch of the legislative and other business of the Senate; that the compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate could not be properly measured by the apparently corresponding duties of the House officials; that while in some instances it was true that officers of the Senate were paid a larger sum than officials in the House of the same name, in other instances the reverse was true; and it has also been contended on the part of the Senate that the officers and employés of that body receiving a greater compensation than officers bearing the same title in the House have duties to perform not performed by the House officials. It is further insisted by the Senate that the whole amount paid for salaries of officers and employés of the House is about one-third larger than that paid for salaries of the officers and employés of the Senate, and that, considering the aggregate salaries paid as aforesaid in the Senate and House, the aggregate paid to the officers and employés of the Senate is not disproportionately large.

The commission has been unable to agree upon any adjustment of the salaries of the officers and employés of the two Houses which shall give to them respectively the same amount of salary and compensation for apparently corresponding positions. It is insisted by that part of the commission representing the Senate that each House must be the judge of the number of officers and employés required for the transaction of its business and their proper compensation. That part of the commission representing the House, though recognizing to a certain extent the force of this claim, is unable wholly to accede thereto. Your commission has therefore failed to agree upon any specific measure of legislation affecting the subject-matter referred to it, and can only join in the recommendation to each of the two Houses of Congress that in the passage of future appropriation bills such legislation shall be incorporated as shall seem to each House to be just and fair, prescribing the number of officers and employés necessary for the transaction of the business of the two Houses, respectively, and their salaries and compensation, having regard, first, to the prompt and accurate transaction of business; and, second, a wise and prudent economy.

O. H. PLATT,
ANGUS CAMERON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Members of the commission on the part of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,
JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Members of the commission on the part of the House of Representatives.

The members of the joint commission on the part of the House, in addition to the foregoing, beg leave to submit and recommend that the following additional employés in the House be provided for, namely:

IN THE CLERK'S OFFICE.

One assistant journal clerk, at $1,800.
One assistant printing and bill clerk, at $1,800.
One laborer, at $720.

IN THE DOORKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Three messengers, at $1,000 each.
One folder, at $900.
One folder, at $840.
Two folders, at $720 each.
Two riding pages (during session), at $2.50 per day each.
Four pages (during session), at $2.50 per day each.
Two cloak-room men (during session), at $50 per month each.
One clerk in the folding-room, at $1,200.

They further recommend that the salary of the Doorkeeper of the House be increased from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum. The former salary is, in their judgment, not commensurate with the onerous duties and responsibilities imposed upon this official.

The increase of force recommended above for the service of the House is believed to be necessary because of the large and constant increase of work in the Clerk's office and Doorkeeper's department and to the increase in membership in the present over the last House. The number of new places recommended to be created is not so great by one-half as was asked for by the Clerk and Doorkeeper.

Appended herewith are submitted, for the information of the House, the letters of the Clerk and Doorkeeper to the joint commission, asking for additional force in their respective departments.

FRANK HISCOCK.
JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN.
WM. H. FORNEY.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 8, 1883.

To the joint commission created by act of March 3, 1883, to adjust the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with your request of December 6, I have the honor to submit the following statement and facts in regard to the clerical force and employés in this office necessary to the proper discharge of the public business.

Year by year the business of the Clerk's office has increased in volume in regular ratio with the increase in population and business of the country. In the Forty-fourth Congress quite a number of positions were abolished and the clerical force largely decreased. Since then the work in this office has more than doubled at some of the desks, and has been largely increased at all of them. The increase in membership in the present House, thirty-two new members having been added, will swell the volume of the work in the office far beyond its former limits, and the present force, not large enough before, will in all probability be wholly unable to properly and promptly discharge the daily and necessary work. The Clerk's office should be an office of experts, most of the positions requiring men of intelligence, good education, and business capacity, for a proper discharge of the duties, and consequently the compensation paid should in some degree approximate the character and value of the services rendered. In submitting the following estimates for an increase of force I should perhaps add that I have sought for, and been largely aided by, the advice and experience of Hon. Edward McPherson, late Clerk of the House, who indorses the recommendations I have the honor to submit herewith.

I would respectfully recommend the following additions to the present clerical force:

First. One assistant journal clerk, at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

An assistant has been provided for the Journal Clerk by special resolution during each Congress since the position was abolished in the Forty-fourth Congress, which fact fully establishes the necessity for making this a permanent position.

Second. One assistant bill and printing clerk, at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

For the last three Congresses a clerk has been detailed from the document-room to assist the bill and printing clerk. The services of the detailed clerk will be necessary in the document-room hereafter, on account of the increase in the membership of the House and consequent increase of work in the document-room. To show the regular and great increase in the work at this desk, I have filed herewith an abstract marked "A," taken from the journals of the House, of the number of House bills and joint resolutions in each Congress from the Thirty-eighth to the Forty-seventh, inclusive. (See abstract "A.")

Third. Second assistant enrolling clerk, at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

At every session of Congress a large amount has been expended for additional assistance in the enrolling-room, approximating a sum sufficient to pay a regular salary for a permanent clerk, and mistakes made in this critical work have been mainly due to the employment of new and untried clerks toward the close of each session.

Fourth. One assistant index clerk, at a salary of $1,800 per annum.

In the Forty-seventh Congress $900 additional was paid for the work of indexing the Journal of the Forty-sixth Congress, and a claim for a like amount is now pending for similar work in the Forty-seventh Congress. The want of the requisite clerical force to carry this work forward during the sessions of Congress necessarily causes great delay in the printing of the Journals of the House. To show how great an increase there has been in the amount of indexing required see abstract "B," herewith filed.

Fifth. Three laborers, at a salary of $60 per month each per annum.

The three additional laborers should be assigned to the Chief Clerk's rooms, the file-rooms, and the enrolling-room. The five laborers now on the Clerk's roll are assigned as follows: One to the stationery-room as a clerk, one in the House library, two in the bath-rooms, and one in the document-room. The additional laborers are needed to care for and clean up the six rooms occupied by the force in the Clerk's office, to wit, the rooms of the Chief Clerk, the rooms of the file clerk, the enrolling clerk's room, and the index clerk's room. They are also needed to run on errands between these offices and care for the public property in the rooms.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

LETTER FROM THE DOORKEEPER.

By reason of the large increase in the membership of the present House an increase of the force in the Doorkeeper's department is necessarily required to make said department effective and for the general welfare and convenience of the members, the present force being entirely inadequate for the purpose. I therefore recommend that provision be made for the following additional force:

Three messengers, at $1,200 per annum each; three messengers, at $1,000 per annum each; three folders, at $900 per annum each; three folders, at $840 per annum each; four folders, at $720 per annum each; two riding pages; eight pages; two cloak-room laborers, at $50 per month during session; and two clerks in the folding and document rooms, at $1,200 per annum each.

J. G. WINTERSMITH. Doorkeeper.

O'DONNELL CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the correspondence in the O'Donnell case, sent from the Department of State and received just before the holiday recess, be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. COX, of New York (at 4 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned.

By Mr. SINGLETON: Of A. T. Threefoot & Son and others, of Meridian, Miss.

By Mr. WHITING: Of citizens of Adams, Mass.

By Mr. WOODWARD: Of P. Nelson and others, dealers in tobacco, of Viroqua, Wis.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inclosing reports of Indian Agent Armstrong relative to the condition and necessities of the Crow Indians in Montana; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico relative to the private land claim in New Mexico, reported as No. 123, in the name of Francisco Sandoval, for the Santisima Trinidad or Rancho de Galvan tract; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of the public debt, how much it has been reduced beyond the amount required by sections 3694 and 3696 of the Revised Statutes relating to the sinking fund, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from Col. Charles E. Blunt, Corps of Engineers, of surveys of certain localities in Maine, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of a number of ex-Union soldiers, praying for the establishment of a soldiers' home in the State of Kansas. The petition is signed by more than twenty thousand ex-soldiers, representing over one thousand regiments and, I think, seventeen States and Territories. The petitioners are now residents of the States of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, the Territories of New Mexico and Wyoming and the Indian Territory. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I also present, and ask that it be made part of these remarks, a preamble and resolution adopted by a reunion of the soldiers of the State of Kansas held at Leavenworth in October last, expressing the sentiment of that assemblage upon the same question. I ask that the petition itself be read, minus the names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks consent that the petition referred to be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

AN APPEAL FOR A SOLDIERS' HOME IN KANSAS.

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives th Congress assembled:

We, your petitioners, representing every regiment, of all arms—artillery, cavalry, and infantry—and every man of war that participated in the defense of our country during the war of the rebellion, 100,000 ex-soldiers and sailors, now residing in the State of Kansas, and hundreds of thousands at present in Colorado, New Mexico, Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, and the Indian Territory, set forth the fact that hundreds of our former comrades in arms, disabled by wounds received and diseases contracted while in the service of their country, are in a helpless condition, dependent upon the labor of their wives and children, a burden to those whom they should support, or upon charity they can not accept without humiliation, for the simplest necessities of life.

Many of these men, by reason of the length of time which has elapsed, the loss of important papers, or the death of those who could have furnished the necessary proofs, can not now hope to establish their right to a pension, and if they could, the character of the original injury would entitle them a pittance so small as to furnish no adequate relief; the influence of time, toil, and pain upon the system, weakened by wounds received or disease contracted in the service, being not considered in the award.

As an example, we cite to the case of Greenville Meade, late private of Company F, One hundred and eighteenth Illinois Infantry, of Fort Scott, recently deceased. After twenty years of suffering and six years of entire helplessness, during which he was confined to the house, wholly dependent upon the labor of his wife, he died in real poverty, and the day after his death the notice came that he had been granted a pension of $4 per month.

Such cases might be multiplied by hundreds throughout this Western country. The reason why they abound here is readily understood. When the discharged soldiers returned to their homes they found the places they had occupied filled by others, and conscious that they would have to compete with those in sound health, they moved to the West, where competition would be less and the opportunities greater. But the hardships incident to a new country increased their infirmities, and at last they are left in poverty, with no prospect of adequate relief, unless the Government, in whose defense they risked everything and lost so much, shall come to their help and furnish them a home wherein the few years of life yet remaining may be spent while they listen for the call that shall summon them from the pain and penury they have so long endured.

We send you this appeal the more cheerfully because we know you are not strangers to facts set forth, and in the past Congress has recognized the right of the soldier and sailor who bared his breast for his country in the time of her peril to a just reward for the service rendered and the injuries received.

We have seen with pleasure the order of the Secretary of War providing shelter and food for a mule that was worn out in the public service, and know that every true man will say, "The soldier who, from the effects of disease contracted in the 'prison pens' of the South, in the arduous campaigns of the war, or the injury resulting from wounds, is no longer able to work, is justly entitled to shelter and food."

We plead for those who can not plead for themselves; their helplessness renders them silent and love of their country seals their lips against complaint.

W. B. SHOCKLEY,
Chairman of Committee on Soldiers' Home.

FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the preamble and resolution which I have forwarded to the desk may be incorporated in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be entered. The Chair hears none.

The preamble and resolution are as follows:

Whereas there are now resident in the State of Kansas upward of 75,000 honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served in the armies of the Union during the war of the rebellion; and

Whereas many of said solders and sailors are disabled from wounds and disease received and contracted during their service in said war and are now in needy circumstances; and

Whereas many of these soldiers and sailors can not now make the necessary proof to enable them to obtain pensions and are now dependent upon the charity of their comrades and friends; and

Whereas the General Government has provided suitable homes for disabled soldiers and sailors in many States of the Union; and

Whereas such homes are remote and difficult of access to destitute soldiers of Kansas and other adjacent Western States: Now, therefore,

We, the soldiers and sailors of the late war now residents of Kansas in reunion assembled at the city of Leavenworth, most respectfully petition our representatives in Congress to take such action as may be necessary to obtain sufficient aid from the United States to establish and maintain a soldiers' home in our State, believing that by so doing the Government will thereby discharge a moral and legal duty which it owes to its defenders who now need its aid and protection; and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Comrade P. B. Plumb, to be by him presented to the Congress of the United States, with the earnest request that he press the bill now before the Senate for such purpose and that he use all honorable means to secure its enactment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of the master and wardens of Escambia Lodge, No. 15, Free and Accepted Masons, of Pensacola, Fla., praying that they be granted the title to the land on which their building is now located; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of J. W. Thompson, Anthony Hyde, and other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill for the protection of children in the District of Columbia from cruelty and abuse, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SLATER presented a petition of the citizens of Oregon, praying that the lands granted to the Oregon Central Railroad Company which have not been earned may be forfeited; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWELL presented two petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that jetties be built at Corson's Inlet and Townsend's Inlet, on the coast of New Jersey, adjacent to Ludlam Island, in order to deepen the water upon the bar and thereby afford a harbor in Ludlam and in Townsend's Bay for vessels sailing along the New Jersey coast; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PIKE presented the petition of E. M. Mason and others, letter-carriers of Concord, N. H., praying that they be granted a vacation of thirty days, the same as is allowed to other Government employés; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BOWEN presented a petition of citizens of Denver, Colo., praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a bill to pension ex-prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of ex-soldiers of Hancock County, Illinois, praying for the passage of an equalization-of-bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of F. M. Thomas Post, Grand Army of the Republic, No. 94, of Iowa; the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 19, Department of Ohio; the petition of Post No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, of Nebraska; the petition of Custer Post, No. 44, Grand Army of the Republic, of Minnesota; the petition of James Morgan Post, No. 127, Grand Army of the Republic, of Missouri; the petition of Post No. 99, Grand Army of the Republic, of Nebraska; the petition of Elliott Post, No. 88, Grand Army of the Republic, of Nebraska; and the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 165, Department of Iowa, praying for the opening up of the Sioux reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of William Elrod, of Shobonier, Ill., praying for legislation to prevent the spread of epidemic diseases among domestic animals; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented the petition of James B. Fox, of Aurora, Ill., praying for the passage of a bill providing that in case a disabled soldier does not make a declaration for an invalid pension previous to his death his widow or children shall be entitled to receive a pension as though he had made such declaration; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of letter-carriers of Oswego, N. Y., praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MAXEY presented a petition of citizens of Paris, Lamar County, Texas, praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 21) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Collin Adams, asking the refunding of the proceeds of the sale of certain cotton seized by the Army of the United States and the proceeds of sales used for the benefit of the Government, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 974) for the relief of Collin Adams and Lucy V. Weatherred.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radish, deceased, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of his property in Brownsville, Tex., by United States military authorities in the year 1865, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 975) for the relief of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radish, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 431) for the relief of Sallie A. Spence;

A bill (S. 379) for the relief of Mrs. J. P. Williams;

A bill (S. 537) for the relief of J. A. Henry and others; and

A bill (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 980) for the relief of William C. McClellan and Robert J. Spotswood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 981) for the relief of Hugo Wediles, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 982) for the maintenance and support of the Marine-Hospital Service; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will state that this is a bill to repeal the monthly tax which is levied upon all our sailors for the maintenance of the marine hospitals, with the intention of making the support of the marine hospitals a charge upon the Government directly, without any tax upon our commerce. It is in the direction of aid to our commerce. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduced a bill (S. 983) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 984) revising the postal laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 985) extending the operations of the Light-House Board over the Saint John's River, within the State of Florida, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 986) granting a pension to Laura Prine, only surviving daughter and heir of Robert F. Prine; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 987) providing for the establishment of a land office at Bartow, Polk County, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 988) further to define and limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 989) to construct a free bridge over the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 990) for the relief of John D. Marrion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 991) for the relief of J. Henry Rives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 992) for the relief of Isaac Davenport and other citizens of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 37) allowing the widow of General Jesse H. Moore, late consul at Callao, Peru, one year's salary; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 38) authorizing the issue of clothing to Sergt. Herman Theune, Company I, Twenty-third United States Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to change the reference of the joint resolution (S. R. 34) for the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000, in accordance with the urgent request of the Mississippi River Commission, for the preservation, repair, and construction of certain works for the improvement of said river, which was introduced on Monday last, from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on the Mississippi River and Tributaries. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ABUSES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be instructed to transmit to the Senate copies of the reports, with the accompanying papers, made by different examiners of the Department of Justice concerning the business of the courts of the United States in Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and Texas, which reports relate to abuses by the officers of said courts and the marshals of said districts in the charging, collecting, and accounting for of fees, and other abuses referred to in the report of Brewster Cameron, general agent of the Department of Justice, made to said Department, dated January 5, 1884.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not desire to object to the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, but I desire to have an opportunity to add something more to the resolution. I believe in the principle, but the difficulty is, I think, that foreign nations have acted upon and have struck at American products in the very principle which is sought to be acknowledged in the resolution in the spirit of retaliation. I only desire that the resolution shall be printed and go over so that I may propose an amendment and the whole matter may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over and be printed.

F. G. SCHWATKA AND WIFE.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to present at this time a report from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks leave at this time to submit a report from the Committee on Claims. It will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 264) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka and wife, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered at this time, and before the Senate determines whether it will consent I desire to state that this is a claim presented by a very aged citizen of Oregon, which accrued in the year 1850 by of the reason taking of his land by the United States for a military purpose. A military reservation is the farm on which he had settled. There were two adverse reports, I think, one of which I made myself, based upon the ground of the laches of the petitioner in presenting his claim. Thereupon the Senate called for the information to be obtained from the commanding officer of that district; and the objection of laches was completely removed, it being shown that this gentleman had been insane for a great many years, nearly all the time to which laches would apply. Thereupon a favorable report was made at the last Congress, and upon explanation the bill unanimously passed the Senate. A favorable report was made in the House, but I believe the bill was not reached for action there.

This gentleman is not only aged, but I understand he has had a calamity which results in the necessity for the amputation of one of his limbs. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], who is his neighbor and whose constituent he is, informs me that it would be a great act of grace and justice if the Senate would take up and deal with his claim at this time, so that he may be relieved in his great infirmity.

The bill provides for the payment of $6,000 to the husband and wife according to the law. The husband is the father of the eminent Arctic naval officer, Lieutenant Schwatka. I ask that by unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. If the Senate will allow the report, which is very brief, to be read, reserving the objection until that time, any Senator may then make the objection if he deems it proper to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that the Senator has reported the bill this morning?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; and it was reported also at the last session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know all about the case.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri knows all about the case. The report of last winter, however, is in print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him this morning be now considered, and in connection with that request he asks that the report of the committee be now read. Is there objection to the reading of the report? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 264) entitled "A bill for the relief of F. G. Schwatka and wife," have considered the same and respectfully report: We adopt the report made from this committee on the 21st day of December, 1881, and recommend the passage of the bill. The report is subjoined for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to have the report of last year read?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 51) entitled "A bill for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr.," have considered the same, and respectfully report:

That F. G. Schwatka, sr., on November 6, 1850, being a married man, with eight or nine children, settled on a tract of land at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon, as a donation claim. November 16, 1850, he filed in the office of the recorder of deeds for Clatsop County his claim, giving its boundaries and embracing six hundred and forty acres. He immediately built a house, and the following year raised a crop of potatoes on the land. He intended to make it his permanent home. He so occupied it until August, 1852, when he was told by Major Hathaway, of the United States Army, that his claim had been selected as a military reservation; whereupon he removed from it. Said claim was taken for a military reservation, now known as the Fort Stevens reservation.

The act of Congress entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," approved September 27, 1850, section 4, provides—

"That there shall be and hereby is granted to every white settler or occupant of the public lands, above the age of eighteen years, being a citizen of the United States * * * now residing in said Territory, or who shall become a resident thereof on or before the 1st day of December, 1850, and who shall have resided upon and cultivated the same for four successive years, and shall otherwise conform to the provisions of this act, the quantity of one half-section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if a single man; and if a married man, or if he shall become married within one year from the 1st day of December, 1850, the quantity of one section, or six hundred and forty acres, one-half to himself and the other half to his wife, to be held by her in her own right. And the surveyor-general shall designate the part inuring to the husband and that to the wife, and enter the same on the records of his office: * * * Provided further, That in all cases provided for in this section the donation shall embrace the land actually occupied and cultivated by the settler thereon."

Section 6 of said act provides—

"That within three months after the survey, or where the survey has been made before the settlement, then within three months from the commencement of such settlement, each of said settlers shall notify the surveyor-general to be appointed under this act of the precise tract or tracts claimed by them respectively under this law, and in all cases it shall be in a compact form; and where it is practicable so to do, the land so claimed shall be taken, as nearly as practicable, by legal subdivisions; but where that can not be done, it shall be the duty of the said surveyor-general to survey and mark each claim with the boundaries as claimed, at the request and expense of the claimant. * * * The surveyor-general shall enter a description of such claims in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, and note temporarily on the township-plats the tract or tracts so designated, with the boundaries.

Section 7 provides—

"That within twelve months after the surveys have been made, or where the survey has been made before the settlement, then within twelve months from the time the settlemnnt was commenced, each person claiming a donation right under this act shall prove to the satisfaction of the surveyor-general, or of such other officer as may be appointed by law for that purpose, that the settlement and cultivation required by this act had been commenced, specifying the time of the commencement; and at any time after the expiration of four years from the date of such settlement shall prove in like manner by two disinterested witnesses the fact of continued residence and cultivation required by the fourth section of this act; and upon such proof being made, the surveyor-general, or other officer appointed by law for that purpose, shall issue certificates, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, setting forth the facts in the case and specifying the land to which the parties are entitled. And the surveyor-general shall return the proof so taken to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and if the said Commissioner shall find no valid objection thereto, patents shall issue for the land according to the certificates aforesaid upon the surrender thereof."

Section 9 provides—

"That no claim to a donation right under the provisions of this act, upon sections 16 or 36, shall be valid or allowed if the residence and cultivation upon which the same is founded shall have commenced after the survey of the same; nor shall such claim attach to any tract or parcel of land selected for a military post, or within one mile thereof, or to any other land reserved for governmental purposes, unless the residence and cultivation thereof shall have commenced previous to the selection or reservation of the same for such purposes."

Section 13 provides—

"That all questions arising under this act shall be adjudged by the surveyor-general as preliminary to a final decision, according to law; * * * to cause proper tract-books to be opened; * * * and to do and perform all other acts and things necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act."

Section 14 provides—

"* * * And that such portions of the public lands as may be designated, under the authority of the President of the United States, for forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful public uses, shall be reserved and excepted from the operations of this act: Provided, That if it shall be deemed necessary, in the judgment of the President, to include in any such reservation the improvements of any settler made previous to the passage of this act, it shall in such cases be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause the value of such improvements to be ascertained, and the amount so ascertained shall be paid to the party entitled thereto, out of any money not otherwise appropriated."

No surveys were made of the township embracing the claim of Mr. Schwatka until 1856. It was, therefore, impossible for the petitioner to file a description of his claim, according to the law requiring such filing, "within three months after survey has been made." Major Hathaway told the petitioner that he would be paid for his claim by the United States when formal possession was taken by them. He made no claim for relief by petition to Congress or otherwise, so far as appears, until December, 1870, and his claim was rejected by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-fifth Congress principally for that reason: the report being made to the Senate by the writer of the present report, May 29, 1878. Thereafter, February 11, 1879, the Senate passed a resolution directing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made by the commanding officer of the Department of the Columbia into said claim, and the Secretary has transmitted the report of said officer for the information of the Senate. From this report, and the affidavits annexed thereto, it appears that Mr. Schwatka was insane for a large portion of the time between his surrender of the premises in 1852 and his application in 1870. He removed to Albany, in Linn County, in June, 1855, and from June, 1855, to August, 1859, he had frequent intervals of mental depression, taking long foot-journeys without letting any person know where he was going or when he would return, and being unfitted for any kind of business.

This condition is now shown to have existed from 1855 to 1868 at frequent intervals. When the former report was made, there was no evidence establishing this condition of dementia for a period preceding 1864, and the committee state that the petitioner seems to have had twelve years within which he might have prosecuted his claim. This period is now satisfactorily accounted for until a time within three years of his being ousted by the Government. We do not think that we ought to apply the doctrine of laches so strictly to a pioneer in Oregon, before it was admitted as a State, before the time of railroads or telegraphs, or punctuality of mail service, as to deprive him of a just claim against the Government for a failure to prosecute it in Washington during those three years, especially when, according to his affidavit, the military officer who informed him of the taking by the United States assured him that provision would be made for his compensation when the Government took actual possession.

It is true that Mr. Schwatka did not do all the acts which were needed to give him a complete title under the statutes of the United States. But he was prevented from doing such acts only by the appropriation by the Government of his land to a public use paramount in right and in importance. He was equitably entitled to be paid for the value of his right to go on and perfect his legal title.

We are therefore of opinion that some allowance should be made to the claimant.

The question of value is of more difficulty. The petitioner's affidavit, annexed to the report of the military officer, sets the value of the land at the time it was taken from him at $10,000. It appears that at the time of the former report there were before the committee an affidavit of the petitioner valuing the land at $4,000; an affidavit of one Shively, saying it was worth $2,500; one of B. C. Kindred, fixing the value at $10,000 "at the time the Government took possession," and $5,000 "when Schwatka left." Other witnesses fix the value at $10,000. It appears that the land is now of great value, being estimated at from $13,000 to $15,000, by reason of valuable fisheries appertaining to it, and its admirable situation at the mouth of the Columbia River. It is difficult to believe that the land which was wild and unoccupied, to be had for the taking by the first settler, two years before Mr. Schwatka left, had in that time risen to a value of $10,000, and that in the nearly thirty years since that time only $3,000 or $5,000 have been added by the increasing population of the important and growing State of Oregon.

Upon the whole, we are inclined to allow the sum of $6,000.

In coming to this conclusion, the committee have been aided by the personal knowledge of the locality of the Senator from Nevada, a member of the committee, who thinks $6,000 a low estimate of the value of the land at the time of the taking. The claimant, having waited so long for compensation, will receive no more than justice if this sum be allowed him.

Under the law, one-half of the claim would have vested in his wife, who was then and is now living.

We therefore recommend the amendment of the bill by providing for the payment of the sum of $6,000, to be equally divided between the claimant and his wife, and that the bill pass so amended.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to F. G. Schwatka, sr., of Salem, Oreg., and to Amelia Schwatka, his wife, $6,000, to be equally divided between them, in full of their claim against the Government of the United States for their donation claim taken by the War Department, in sections 6 and 7, in township 8 north, range 10 west of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, and what is now known as Fort Stevens.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate to say that I for the first time this morning heard of this claim. I am, however, well acquainted with the claimant and with the tract of land in question.

Mr. Schwatka is a very aged and worthy citizen of Oregon. It appears from the report of the committee that he was one of the pioneers by whose energy, enterprise, and sacrifice the great Northwest, including Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, with its unrivalled resources, was saved to the Union. It appears that he settled upon the tract of land in question under the act of Congress commonly known as the donation law, built him a house, and proceeded to the cultivation of his claim; but the tract was taken by the Government as a military reservation. It would have been a very valuable private claim. Its value to the Government can not be estimated. It is the site of the fort which commands the south channel of the Columbia River.

Mr. Schwatka, as I have said before, is aged; he is infirm. He has lately submitted to a series of surgical operations. First, some of his toes were amputated, and I believe, finally, his foot. He can, in the course of human events, live but a short time.

I hope that the bill will pass the Senate and that the attention of the other House will be called to it, so that it will be taken up and acted upon there, and Mr. Schwatka receive what he should have received nearly a quarter of a century ago, so that it may do him some good during the last days of his life.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF FORT WORTH, TEX.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider Senate bill 844, to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., reported by the chairman of the Committee on Finance and placed on the Calendar yesterday.

Mr. FRYE. Is it a bill that will occupy any time?

Mr. COKE. Not more than a minute or two.

Mr. FRYE. I shall not object to this bill, but I will ask for the regular order after it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to reserve objection, in order to inquire of the Senator from Texas why a national bank requires a special act to increase its capital.

Mr. COKE. I will answer the Senator in the language of the Comptroller of the Currency, which is very clear and very brief. The letter is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance. The Comptroller says:

Section 5142 of the Revised Statutes provides that any association may, by its articles of association, provide for an increase of its capital stock from time to time, &c., but that the maximum of such increase, to be provided for in the articles of association, shall be determined by the Comptroller of the Currency.

The First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., in its articles of association, fixed their maximum at $100 000, and this was approved by the Comptroller of the Currency at the time of the organization of the bank.

The Attorney-General of the United States, in an opinion rendered on the 23d of February, 1882, referred to on page 10 of my annual report for 1882, decided that the maximum of increase of the capital stock of a national bank having once been fixed by the determination of the Comptroller of the Currency could not afterwards be changed by any act of the bank or the Comptroller.

The First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., desiring to increase its capital beyond the limit of $100,000 fixed in its articles of association, therefore finds it necessary to ask for legislation by Congress to enable it to do so, and this bill has therefore been introduced.

You will find a precedent for such action by Congress in volume 22 of the United States Statutes at Large, page 420, when the Second National Bank of Xenia, Ohio, was authorized to increase its capital beyond the limit fixed by its articles of association.

Unless a general act is passed which will enable national banks to change the maximum limit of increase of their capital stock by an amendment of their articles of association, the passage of special acts similar to the bill inclosed will be necessary in some cases.

The bill inclosed is unobjectionable and necessary, as stated above, and I recommend its passage.

The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to reserve an objection. The Chair will therefore again ask the Senate, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., to increase its capital stock, in accordance with existing laws, to any sum not exceeding $500,000, notwithstanding the limit heretofore fixed in its original articles of association and determined by the Comptroller of the Currency; and the Comptroller of the Currency is authorized to fix the limit of increase of the capital stock of the bank at the amount of $500,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed by a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR THE LIBRARY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, pursuant to the order of the Senate made yesterday, will announce the appointment of additional members of the Select Committee respecting Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, as follows: Mr. MORRILL and Mr. BAYARD.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine at Bangor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the report of the Committee on Rules. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is in line 4 of clause 1 of Rule XVII, after "improvements," to strike out:

And bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also in clause 2 of the same rule, after "Post-Roads," strike out:

Also amendments proposing new items of appropriations to bills for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to understand the effect of the amendment upon the text of the printed recommendation of the committee, whether if this amendment is adopted it will operate to take out of the text, as reported by the committee, the words now in italics upon the third, fourth, and fifth lines of the first clause of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the whole text, including the italics, is before the Senate. If, therefore, the amendment be defeated, the words in italics will stand as a part of the rule. If the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which is to strike out, be agreed to, those words will be stricken out.

Mr. BAYARD. Then it will be in order subsequently to move to strike out the words in italics?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion of the Senator from Maine. The italics are not amendments; they are part of the text. The words are inserted in italics, as the Chair understands, by the Committee on Rules in order to show to the Senate the difference between the new rule and the old one.

Mr. BAYARD. Precisely so; but I understand the amendment now pending is that of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BECK. No; of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Maine is now under consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. To strike out the words in italics?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. All right. I supposed the more extended amendment of the Senator from Kansas was pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair yesterday held that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine took precedence of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, and the motion is to strike out these words. Although they are printed in italics, and would therefore appear to be an amendment, they are really a part of the text. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out those words.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the first amendment, as he feels bound to do so strictly, as there are really two amendments. The question is on striking out the words read where they first occur.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where do they first occur?

Mr. BECK. In clause 1.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much of the matter in italics in clause 1 is to be stricken out?

Mr. FRYE. After "Improvements."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the word "Improvements," in the fourth line of Rule XVII. Then they occur again in a subsequent clause.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the motion include the words "Committee on Internal Improvements?"

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. HALE. It does not touch that matter at all. It is reserved.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I wanted to get at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again state the question. The question now is, as the Chair thinks he is bound to put it, on striking out in the fourth and sixth lines of Rule XVII these words:

And bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, which shall be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. If the motion carries it leaves the appropriation bills as they are now. If the motion is voted down, the effect is to give this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were here, I understand he would vote "yea;" I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Anthony,	Coke,	Jackson,	Platt,
Bayard,	Colquitt,	Logan,	Plumb,
Beck,	Dawes,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Butler,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Slater,
Call,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vest,
Camden,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hale,	Morrill,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Blair,	George,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Brown,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck.
Conger,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Pike,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—24.

Allison,	Hampton,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Pa.,	Harrison,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Fair,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Farley,	Jonas,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,	Wilson.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], which is the same thing in substance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I desire to submit an amendment, if in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not now in order, as the Chair thinks. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was superseded for the time being by the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, as clause 5 to Rule XVII, the following:

That the general appropriation bills shall be referred as follows:

Making appropriations for the support of the Army, for the erection and repair of fortifications, and for the support of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs; appropriations for the payment of pensions, to the Pensions Committee; appropriations for the Navy and for the Naval Academy, to the Naval Committee; appropriations for the Post-Office Department, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to the Committee on Agriculture; appropriations for the Indian Bureau, to the Committee on Indian Affairs; appropriations for the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and the several items of appropriation contained in the remaining general appropriation bills, germane to the general jurisdiction of the committees of the Senate, shall be referred to such committees respectively. All such subjects of appropriation, and all appropriation bills so referred, shall be reported to the Senate by the committees to which referred, with proposed amendments, within one week of the date of such reference, and shall be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I move now to strike out of the third and fourth lines of clause 1 of this rule the words "Internal Improvements" and insert "Commerce."

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me a moment. By unanimous consent those words were allowed to remain here until a direct vote was taken on Rule XXVI, the only remaining rule not acted upon, where comes up directly the question whether or not the Committee on Commerce should be divided.

Mr. VEST. I want to raise the question and get a direct vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, clause 1, of Rule XVII, after the word "on," it is moved to strike out "Internal Improvements" and insert "Commerce."

Mr. VEST. I have no disposition to press the matter now if it is disagreeable to the Senator, and it can be taken up afterward on Rule XXVI.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that it makes any practical difference, only in Rule XXVI the question is squarely presented of referring the river and harbor bill to a new committee on internal improvements. In that rule it is squarely presented, and we shall reach it in a very few minutes.

Mr. VEST. If the gentleman desires it I shall wait till then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VEST. I withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to Rule XVII as amended.

Mr. FRYE. With the exception of the words "Internal Improvements."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The effect of that, the Chair thinks, would be to leave out the words "Internal Improvements" by a vote of the Senate. The rule by general consent can be passed over until Rule XXVI is disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. We may as well settle the question.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that we pass over informally Rule XVII until we have disposed of Rule XXVI. That will obviate all confusion and difficulty about the matter.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of Rule XVII be passed by until Rule XXVI shall have been disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will now read Rule XXVI with the amendments which have been agreed to as if they were a part of the text so that Senators can see how the rule now stands. The Chair understands that there are no open amendments pending at this time. The Secretary will read the rule as it now stands as it has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXVI.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

1. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

A Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Finance, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Appropriations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Manufactures, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Public Lands, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Private Land Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Pensions, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Claims, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that, to conform to the action which the Senate has just taken, those words should be struck out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will complete the reading, when the rule will be open to a motion.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that I will, with the recognition of the Chair, make that motion.

Mr. INGALLS. I give notice that I will resist it and ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to amend.

The reading of the rule was continued, as follows:

A Committee on Patents, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of five Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Territories, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Railroads, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of three Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, or creating a charge upon the same.
A Committee on Printing, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on the Library, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Rules, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Engrossed Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate.
A Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
A Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.
A Committee on Commerce, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to commerce, to shipping, to the merchant marine, and to the Life-Saving Service and light-houses.
A Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, to consist of seven Senators, which shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditures as shall be referred to it, and conduct all investigations into the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate, unless the Senate shall otherwise direct.
A Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Fisheries, to consist of seven Senators, to which shall be referred all matters relating to fish and fisheries.

2. The Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Printing, and on the Library shall continue and have power to act until their successors are appointed.

Mr. HALE. In the clause relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia I move to strike out the words in italics, to conform to the action of the Senate already taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment, which will be read:

The SECRETARY. It is moved to strike out—

To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. On which motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who would vote "yea" if present, and I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. BAYARD (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is absent, paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. Were he here, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK (when Mr. WILLIAMS' name was called). My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. My colleague would vote "yea" if here.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Anthony,	Coke,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Slater,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate being equally divided, the nays have it; and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. VEST. It being now proper to raise the question which I endeavored to raise on Rule XVII, I move to strike out the following words, in italics, in Rule XXVI:

A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

And in the next clause I move to strike out all after the word "Senators," in the first line, being the words:

To which shall be referred all subjects relating to commerce, to shipping, to the merchant marine, and to the Life-Saving Service and light-houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes two amendments. The first one will be read first.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words:

A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the speech made yesterday by the present occupant of the chair, and it seems to me it has not been answered or met by any one. Until human nature is radically changed, just so long as particular committees have charge of special departments of the expenditure of the Government, just so long will you increase the expenditures. Now, I assert what the experience of every Senator will confirm to be the truth, that just so soon as a committee is appointed, for instance in regard to the Navy, in regard to military affairs, or upon fiscal questions, that very instant the most intimate and, I admit, proper relations begin between that particular Department and the Senators on that committee. If appropriations are to be received by any of the great Departments of the Government, to whom would it naturally apply? If one of my brother Senators to-day wanted a favor from the Navy Department, to what Senator on this floor should he go? It would be to the head of the Committee on Naval Affairs. So it would be in regard to military affairs, because in the very nature of things, as I said before, without any improper influence, there immediately, so soon as a committee is organized, naturally becomes an intimate relation and reliance one upon the other between the Department and the committee. The result is that there is too much rivalry between the different committees in regard to which shall secure the largest appropriations. The inevitable result, as the Senator from Vermont said yesterday so much better than I could possibly say it, is that as you multiply the committees you increase the expenses of the Government.

Now, in regard to the specific question that comes before the Senate on the motion which I have had the honor to offer, it is proposed to take away from the Committee on Commerce all control over the river and harbor bill, which, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] was pleased to say yesterday, has succeeded in absorbing the functions of the Committee on Commerce almost entirely. It is proposed to eliminate that portion of the duties of the Committee on Commerce and to give it to a new committee, called the Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine members.

Much has been said on this floor from time to time in criticism of the appropriations for rivers and harbors. I am the humblest member of the Committee on Commerce and the youngest, and in the presence of the chairman and its senior members I have no defense to make of its course; but I will say in the interest of fairness and candor and honesty and justice that if river and harbor bills have been pressed through the committee and through the Senate which ought never to have been passed, members of this body are responsible more than the Committee on Commerce itself. I undertake to say, and the facts will justify me in the assertion, that the solicitation, the urgent, the personal application to and pressure upon that committee in regard to the river and harbor bill is the cause of the manner in which that bill has been reported to and hurried through the Senate.

So far from discriminating for that measure, the Congressional record of the last session shows that the Commerce Committee reported no river and harbor bill. Such a bill came to us from the House only one day before the adjournment of the session, and it was not then reported, but the bill in regard to American shipping, the most important, in my judgment, that could come before Congress at this or any other session, was reported by that committee. I had the honor to be the organ of the committee in making the report, and I pressed for its consideration, and yet Senators objected to its consideration. The committee had done its duty fully, distinctly, and fairly. The Senate refused to take up the bill or to consider it at that time. So far from the river and harbor bill absorbing the functions of the Committee on Commerce, I appeal to the records to bear me out in the assertion that no committee in the Senate did its duty more fully or completely at the last or any other session than the Committee on Commerce. No bill in regard to navigation, no bill in regard to foreign commerce, failed to receive the consideration and due action of that committee.

But, Mr. President, we have now before us an example in regard to the action which is attempted to be put upon the Senate in the increase of committees. If there is one question in which, as a public man, I am more interested than any other, together with the Senators who represent the great States of the Mississippi Valley, it is the improvement of the Father of Waters, the great river which washes in its onward course to the ocean more than twenty-three States and Territories. Years ago, under the pressure of public opinion and the exigencies of the time, this Senate created a Committee on the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, and the argument made then was that the Commerce Committee could not consider this great question on account of the river and harbor bill absorbing all its functions, and that a special committee should be created. It was created, and what has been the result? I have nothing to say in regard to the personnel of that committee, I have nothing but praise to give them; and yet what does the record show has been the result of taking away from the Committee on Commerce this great question, this question most absorbing and vital to the people of the West, and putting it in the hands of a special committee? The record shows that nothing has been done. The session before last, when the Mississippi River swept over the whole valley and the country was appalled by the loss of property and life, then, under the influence of this great disaster, the Committee on the Mississippi River and its Tributaries reported a bill, which we passed through the Senate unanimously I believe. It fell still-born, and has never been heard of since; and but for the action of the Committee on Commerce not a dollar would have been appropriated to this great river or any of its tributaries. Not one dollar has come from this special committee, not one single measure which has given relief to the people of the West upon this great question. The Mississippi River has received every dollar of its appropriations from the Committee on Commerce and from that alone.

I speak of this to illustrate the fact that it is not in the creation of committees that we must expect the public business on this great question to be performed; it is in renewed diligence and attention on the part of the committees already created and the members who constitute them.

But, Mr. President, again; I allude now to a question which dwarfs in insignificance compared to that to which I have already alluded. I had hoped when this Committee on Rules was organized and the organization of committees was under consideration that one of the first things done would be the decrease of committees. I say now, in no spirit of invidious comparison with the other side of the Chamber or between those of my brother Senators who are chairmen of committees and those of us who are not, but I undertake to say as a matter of truth and fact that there are six of the standing committees of the Senate that have never had a bill or a resolution or a particle of business before them within the memory of a living man that I know of. They are all sinecure committees. They were created simply to give secretaries to members of the Senate and a committee-room. I do not complain of it, however. We have got a Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; and yet what has it done? What has the Committee on Rules done in the way of ameliorating this condition of affairs? Instead of getting rid of the abuses in the organization or the service of the committees, what has it done? It has increased the standing committees of the Senate from thirty-four to thirty-eight, saying nothing in regard to the special committees. Mr. President, if we would strike out six of the present standing committees, asking for renewed activity on the part of those that remain, in my judgment honestly the public interest would greatly be subserved.

For these reasons, and not because I care whether the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, of which, as I say, I am the humblest member, shall remain intact or not, but because I am satisfied that if we multiply the committees and continue to increase them, instead of advancing the public business, instead of confirming the public interest, we strike at it, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I have heard no reason which to my mind justifies the change proposed in the creation of a new committee to take charge of the river and harbor bill. The improvement of rivers and harbors comes under the jurisdiction of Congress in virtue of the power vested by the Constitution in Congress to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. It would therefore seem that the Committee on Commerce, which heretofore has had charge of river and harbor bills and from which it is now proposed to transfer that subject to a new committee, was most appropriately invested with that jurisdiction. It is very apparent that a committee which is charged with the duty of investigating the manifold questions affecting or touching or bearing upon our foreign and domestic commerce which come before this body should have charge of a subject so intimately blended with them as the improvement of our rivers and harbors. The commercial value of every river and every harbor, their relations to our foreign and domestic commerce, the extent and commercial importance of the country tributary to them, are considerations entering into the estimate in every item of appropriation in our river and harbor bills. This knowledge is invaluable in dealing with the various subjects other than river and harbor bills which must be considered by the Committee on Commerce—it is indeed indispensable in dealing with many of them.

The jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce can not be divided in the manner proposed without doing violence to the theory on which the committee was originally created nor without actual injury to this branch of the public business.

I have heard but one plausible reason assigned for the proposed change, and that has no sort of foundation in fact. It is that the Committee on Commerce has not the time to consider all the questions referred to it, and is to be relieved by taking away from it the river and harbor bill.

Now, it is well known to Senators that the river and harbor bills never reach the Committee on Commerce from the House, where they originate, until the last days of the session, usually eight or ten days before adjournment. Until this time the entire session is devoted to the consideration of other business. To transfer the river and harbor bills, then, will add nothing to the efficiency of the Committee on Commerce in dealing with other questions referred to it. If the Committee on Commerce has failed to come up to the standard of the Committee on Rules, which in the pending bill proposes the change, some other remedy than this of taking away jurisdiction over the river and harbor bills must be found, for those bills never come before that committee until the close of the session, after all its other business has been disposed of. As a matter of fact, my experience as a member of that committee teaches me that it is as abundantly able to consider and report upon all questions referred to it as any other of the committees of the Senate. If I am mistaken in this, the change proposed will certainly not help the committee or the Senate out of the trouble.

It is well known, Mr. President, that bills are passed much more rapidly and with much more facility through the Senate than through the House on account of the difference in the constitution of the two bodies, the one small and compact and the other large and unwieldy. It is also well known that with the expiration of every Congress large numbers of bills which have passed the Senate die on the Calendar of the House from non-action. I can not see the good to be accomplished by increasing the number of Senate committees, with the additional attendant expense, in order to increase the number of Senate bills to be ignored and permitted to expire without action in the House. We have already committees which should be abolished, and quite a number of them, and should not create more. We already have more than enough to prepare a much greater amount of work than the House can consider. Why do more? Why have more salaried committee clerks and messengers, when many of those we now have have nothing to do? I hope, sir, that the change proposed in the pending bill, so far as it affects the Committee on Commerce and the creation of a new committee to take a part of its jurisdiction, will be voted down. I agree fully with the Senator from Missouri, and will vote for his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I freely admit that the position occupied by me at this moment, almost necessarily seeming to criticise a committee of the Senate, and one of which I am a member, I am happy to say, is a very delicate one, and I desire in advance to say that whatever facts I may state they are not in the nature of criticism upon the Committee on Commerce as it stands to-day.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] criticised first the idea that this committee was not competent to take charge of the river and harbor bill, and suggested that this was a reflection upon the committee because they had been extravagant and had been subject to animadversions of the public in relation to the river and harbor bill. Mr. President, that idea never was entertained for a moment by the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules never considered that for a moment, and their report has no such reflection in it and is not open to the charge. The river and harbor bill was given to another committee not because in the opinion of the Committee on Rules this Committee on Commerce was not competent to take charge of it and would not do it as prudently and as carefully and as properly as any committee of the Senate, but in order to leave the Committee on Commerce ample time to deal with questions of infinitely greater importance.

The Senator from Missouri, in speaking of the multiplicity of committees, said that there was a committee created on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and then went on to say that that committee had effected nothing, and that the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate gave all that the Mississippi River received. Why, sir, the Committee on the Mississippi River, of which I had the honor to be a member at the last Congress, reported a bill promptly to the Senate of the United States appropriating, I think, $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. They pressed it before the Senate. It was promptly passed by the Senate; it went to another branch of Congress, and there came the very difficulty with the Committee on Commerce there. What was that Committee on Commerce? A committee created with but one central idea, a committee created for one single purpose, and that was a river and harbor bill. Ever since I have known anything about Congress the sole purpose of the Committee on Commerce—I am not criticising now the Committee on Commerce of the Senate—has been to contrive in every possible way to get two-thirds of the members of a branch of Congress in its favor, move a suspension of the rules, put it upon its passage, and prevent any opportunity for amendment, any opportunity for debate; and when our bill which we sent from the Senate to the House of Representatives was there taken up, it was not referred to the Committee on Mississippi River Improvement of that House, but was referred to the Committee on Commerce. Why? So that that committee in its general river and harbor bill might have the full strength of the friends of the Mississippi River and its tributaries to carry that bill under a suspension of the rules once more.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator from Maine allow me a word?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. GIBSON. The bill was left upon the Speaker's table of the House of Representatives; it was never referred even to the Committee on Commerce. A motion to that effect was made, requiring of course unanimous consent, but objection was made.

Mr. FRYE. Why, Mr. President, in the river and harbor bill, reported from the Committee on Commerce, that came over to the Senate, that very item was included to make up a part of the $18,000,000. It made up to quite an extent that great appropriation bill, so great that it toppled over of itself in the United States Senate, and that was the reason that the Mississippi River did not receive the amount which our Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement agreed to appropriate. We passed another bill in this body appropriating for the improvement of the Potomac flats. We passed it as a separate bill, and as a separate bill it would have gone through the House, and they would have had the money. As a separate bill the Mississippi River improvement money would have gone through the House, and the country would have had the benefit of it. Instead of that, those two bills were reported by the Committee on Commerce in their great river and harbor bill for but one single purpose, and that was to create strength for the whole river and harbor bill, and they sent it over here appropriating $18,000,000. If the Mississippi River improvement appropriation had been by itself and the Potomac flats appropriation had been by itself then the attention of this country would not have been attracted and a portion of it horrified with the immensity of this bill, and it was the Committee on Commerce that defeated that course. The Committee on Commerce alone defeated it, and they defeated it under that central idea of theirs that they are created for one single purpose, and that is to distribute the largest sum of money possible into every district of the United States under the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. VEST. Is not the Senator from Maine mistaken in his assertion that the Senate passed a separate appropriation bill for the Potomac flats?

Mr. FRYE. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. VEST. I was on that committee, and have been on it from the commencement. I stood here and voted to put in the general appropriation bill the appropriation for the Potomac flats on the ground that it had been under the consideration of a special committee, of which I was a member, for the whole summer, and that we ought to have voted a separate bill. The Senator is mistaken; that is all.

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is very distinct that I voted, I think, for $500,000.

Mr. VEST. Voted for it on the general appropriation bill, on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], who was chairman of the special committee.

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr VEST. I know I am right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Maine will allow me to suggest that I think the statement of the Senator from Missouri is correct. That appropriation was reported from the special committee and offered as an amendment to the river and harbor bill and inserted in the river and harbor bill by the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Of course I am liable to be wrong, as I trust entirely to memory; but that does not change the argument I was making touching the other bill to which the Senator from Missouri alluded.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment further to the action of the Committee on Rules on the increase of committees. The Senator criticised the Committee on Rules for the increase of committees. The Committee on Rules has not increased a single committee. It provided for this committee on internal improvements and it provided for a committee on expenditures in the several Departments, making two new committees and only two; and it struck out the Committee on Manufactures and the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, leaving the committees in number precisely as they were before we touched them. We reported it so to the Senate, and the Senate, both sides agreeing, very promptly overruled the Committee on Rules, and restored the Committee on Manufactures and restored the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and put in a new committee on fisheries in addition to them. If there is to be criticism, it should be upon the Senate and not upon our committee.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Maine will permit me——

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. VEST. I did not wish to do his committee any injustice; but I take the report as I find it. On one side of this page is the list of committees as they stand before the adoption of this report, and I find thirty-four standing committees. Upon the other side is the list of committees as he proposes to make them, and I find them upon actual enumeration to be thirty-eight.

Mr. FRYE. That simply comes from making certain special committees standing committees. They have been special for session after session heretofore.

Mr. VEST. Still the fact remains as I stated, that instead of thirty-four standing committees of the Senate there are now to be thirty-eight.

Mr. FRYE. But not creations of the Committee on Rules. They were created as special committees by the Senate, and they have had their clerks. We have put them into the list as standing committees, because we find them provided for at every session. That makes no difference.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] touches what is perhaps the vital point in this matter, the question whether or not the Committee on Commerce has time to give the necessary consideration to questions of commerce and the river and harbor bill; and he says that the river and harbor bill comes from the House at the close of a session, and that this Committee on Commerce gives it about one week's consideration, reports it to the Senate, and that is all the time that is taken up by the river and harbor bill. Why, Mr. President, that is just exactly what this country objects to; it is exactly what I object to in my place here as a Senator. I found on my desk here this morning five different bills referred to the Committee on Commerce asking appropriations for rivers and harbors, I think four from the State of Florida. I say that instead of permitting the other House to send a bill of river and harbor appropriations over to the Senate and the Senate Committee on Commerce taking it up and spending just one week on a bill with perhaps four hundred different items——

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. FRYE. That is a bad point; let me finish the sentence. With a bill containing perhaps four hundred different items, extending over every portion of the United States of America, requiring a certain amount of information about every river and lake and harbor and coast of this whole country, sending it over here and then spending just one week in the consideration of that bill and putting their indorsement upon it as the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, I say that is just exactly what the country objects to.

Mr. COKE. Now, Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. COKE. I would state that the river and harbor bill originates in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. COKE. It comes to this body, and as I stated in the remarks which I made, it usually reaches the Committee on Commerce of the Senate eight or ten days before the close of the session. It is all the time that is left, not all the committee would like to have. I should like to know from the Senator from Maine how the creation of a new committee is going to bring that bill from the House earlier and give that new committee more chance and better opportunities than the Committee on Commerce has.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maine quoted, I believe, from some other Senator whose remarks I did not hear, some statement about the time spent by the Committee on Commerce upon the river and harbor bill. The statement is wholly inconsistent with what I have been informed on very high authority is the fact and with what I have stated on my own authority to the country. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what is the degree of time and study which his committee has been able to give to the river and harbor bill in times past. I respectfully ask my friend from Maine to allow him to make that statement now.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understood the Senator from Texas to make a statement of a general character and not of the precise time occupied by the Committee on Commerce in the examination of the river and harbor bill. When the river and harbor bill comes over to the Senate from the House of Representatives it has been the practice of the Committee on Commerce to immediately enter upon the examination of that bill, and as the Senator from Texas said, give night and day to the examination of the bill every day, and the whole committee go through with it. The bill is first analyzed by a proper officer of the committee, so that every item is stated with a reference to the engineers' reports; and every report, from the Chief of Engineers down to the subordinate local engineers and every item in the river and harbor bill is gone through with and examined. In many instances the examination is repeated every year, because half the items of the bill and more are items that have been in the bill year after year, and all those members who have been on the committee for any length of time are familiar with the general character of the bill. Every item is examined, and we have still in the records of the committee the abstracts of the various bills and their examinations by the committee. The whole time of the committee when the bill comes over is occupied until the bill is fully and completely disposed of. That does not interfere with the transaction of the ordinary business of the session, because it comes at a later period of the session.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas stated what I have no doubt is correct, that the bill came from the House very late in the session to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, was referred to them, and he then stated that ordinarily about a week would be spent upon it, and it would then be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Maine will allow me to call his attention to the fact that the Senate Committee on Commerce at the last session refused to report the bill favorably, because they had not sufficient time to examine it as they desired to do. They reported the bill, therefore, to the Senate without a recommendation.

Mr. FRYE. I started out by saying that I was not criticising this Committee on Commerce in the Senate, and I do not intend to do it. It is not my purpose here. I was making an argument from the statement of the committee itself.

Now, I admit that the river and harbor bill is as important as any bill presented to the two branches of Congress; it is a bill absolutely necessary for the prosperity of the country; I believe in the river and harbor bill and the necessary appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors as much as any man does; but I ask, why should not the Committee on Commerce, if it has jurisdiction, commence with the beginning of the session, and as bills are referred to them in the Senate examine each one of those bills as to its merits by itself, and then when the general bill comes over from the House of Representatives they are prepared to proceed with it and in a week's time intelligently report it to the Senate.

The objection to the river and harbor bill is that over in the House of Representatives it never is considered; the objection is that it is passed under a suspension of the rules; the objection is that no chance is there to offer amendments; the objection is that it is not debated; the objection is that the country does not have the information about it that it is fairly entitled to. Why, sir, I come over here to the Senate and I find that everything is open to amendment; I find that everything is subject to debate, even the rules reported, and almost endless debate sometimes. I made a proposition that there should be a previous question in the United States Senate, believing it to be important that there should be one in so large a body as this, and that debate should be stopped in a legitimate parliamentary way, instead of being stopped as it is in the Senate every once in a while by compelling us to sit two-thirds through the night to strangle it. The objection made by almost every Senator was that the right to debate must be preserved in the United States Senate because it did not exist in the other branch. There comes over here a bill that has neither been debated nor amended, it goes to the Committee on Commerce, they should report it back to the Senate, and because it has been passed under a suspension of the rules elsewhere every item of it should be examined by that Committee on Commerce with the utmost care; they should study the geography, ascertain the depth of the rivers, the commerce that can be floated upon them, whether you are making reservoirs to run saw-mills and logs or whether you are making reservoirs necessary for the improvement of the navigation of the country. I say the moment the session commences, at the early part of the session, in considering bills as they are sent to them here, the committee can be getting ready. I know they can not originate an appropriation bill, but there is no objection on the face of this rule to their considering separate bills, so as to be prepared when the great bill comes to consider and discuss it item by item intelligently, so that we can understand what we are voting upon.

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator, with his permission, that it has been the invariable custom of the Committee on Commerce, since I have been a member of it, to examine thoroughly in advance before the time the bill will come before the committee, so as to be ready to go on and act intelligently upon it at once.

Mr. FRYE. If that is so—and it must be so if the Senator so states—every minute of the time of the Committee on Commerce ought to be occupied from the first of the session up to the time they report the bill, and they surely have no time to attend to anything else.

Mr. President, I point to this fact: In 1861 we had a merchant marine equal to that of any nation on the face of this earth. In two years more with the progress that was making in 1859 and 1860 and 1861 we should have had more tonnage upon the seas in the foreign commerce than Great Britain herself, and yet to-day Great Britain carries 85 per cent. of all the exports and all the imports, amounting to $1,600,000,000, for us.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but does he mean to make the impression on the Senate and the country that the American marine commenced decreasing in 1861?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. VEST. In 1862?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. VEST. I assert here—and I did not suppose there could be any question in regard to it—that the decline of American shipping commenced five years before that. So far from commencing in 1861, it is agreed upon all hands that it commenced at least five years before that time.

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is (and I think the figures will show it) that our highest tonnage was in 1861.

Mr. VEST. I do not think I can be mistaken.

Mr. FRYE. I have not the figures here, because I did not intend to make a speech on that subject.

Mr. VEST. I can go into it and produce the figures.

Mr. FRYE. I trust the Senator and I will both go into the subject. I stand by my statement that in 1861 the American tonnage in foreign commerce was larger than it was at any other period.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is mistaken. It had begun to decline before that.

Mr. FRYE. I stand by my statement. I said to-day Great Britain carried 85 per cent. of our exports and imports and we carry but 15 per cent. ourselves.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator say that is Great Britain's proportion?

Mr. FRYE. Eighty-five per cent. is carried in foreign ships. The gentleman must not be so hypercritical. I mean that in foreign ships 85 per cent. of our commerce is carried and our own ships 15 per cent. and a fraction. Now, from 1861—and I still adhere to that—down to the very moment I am talking the course of the merchant marine of the United States has been the lobster's—backward—until it is down to 15 per cent. of our own exports and imports in the carrying trade.

Why, Mr. President, if this is permitted to go on, in two or three years more, with the same decrease, there will be no American ships carrying our exports or bringing our imports. It will all be done in foreign bottoms. We could not do anything during the war, I confess; we could not do anything for three or four or five years after the war, I admit, our currency was in such a condition; but what have we been doing since? If the Committee on Commerce on the part of the Senate has had ample time, all but a week of its time at every session of Congress, to devote to these great commercial questions, what has the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate done for American commerce in the last fifteen years? What has the Committee on Commerce on the part of the House done for American shipping in the last fifteen years? The first session I was in the House I referred to the Committee on Commerce in the House a bill to repeal compulsory pilotage. Is it repealed? Has any report been made? Has any action been had? This very day compulsory pilotage takes $2,000,000 a year from the few ships we have left carrying our goods abroad and bringing our goods home. To-day compulsory pilotage takes 8 per cent. of the net earning of every vessel of ours that travels the ocean.

Mr. BAYARD. Does that apply to American ships or foreign ships?

Mr. FRYE. Ships engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. BAYARD. Is $2,000,000 the entire amount?

Mr. FRYE. No; $2,000,000 is our own proportion.

Mr. BAYARD. That is confined to American tonnage?

Mr. FRYE. Entirely to American tonnage. Why, sir, until last year, I think it was, when New York repealed the compulsory pilotage law for Hell Gate, the United States had expended on Hell Gate $3,000,000, and on its light-houses and buoys and monuments and its blasting and deepening and widening, and it made Hell Gate so that for the last five years the Senator from Kentucky could take a ship and pilot it through there without any instruction from any human being by looking at his chart; and yet until the last year the United States permitted the pilots of the State of New York to make every American schooner running from Maine into Hell Gate pay about half the wages of her captain for a month's service to a pilot for no service. The men running these vessels knew the road just exactly as the pilots knew the road. They could go by night or by day, in fog or in light. Several of them used to be joined to be carried through by a tug with a United States licensed pilot on the tug's deck to bring them through. That pilot could take six at a time. A New York pilot would go out to the mouth of Hell Gate, board the six schooners in the rear of the tug fastened to her, and ask if they had a pilot. "No, we have got a tugboat; what do we want with a pilot?" "Pay me, then." Every one of them has been compelled to pay, whether they took him or not, with a licensed pilot on the tugboat and they in tow of the tug themselves; and 99 per cent. of our ships are towed into New York by tugboats. In Massachusetts it is the same. Only a day or two ago I saw, by a rule of the pilots of Boston Harbor, that they only went out 10 miles. The danger in Boston Harbor is not within 10 miles. There is not a man running a coaster or a ship on our New England coast who can not go into Boston Harbor after he is within 10 miles. The danger is beyond. Only a few days ago I saw that a ship was wrecked beyond, and could not reach a pilot, for the pilots were in the harbor; and a day or two ago I saw another statement—that was a heavy storm, and the pilots had gone home out of the storm, to protect themselves and also to spend Christmas Day at home.

And yet I say from 1798 down to now this infernal system of pirating has been allowed by the Congress of the United States. In 1789 they remitted pilotage to the States. Well, perhaps they did it because then we had no lights and no buoys and no monuments and no charts, and each State could tell best for itself what was needed; but to-day the pathway of the ocean is lighted as Pennsylvania avenue is lighted by the gas lamps on the side; to-day the charts of the United States are as the alphabet to the boy learning his letters; everything is plain, and the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not make any error. Any intelligent man can pilot his ship to-day with the aid of the chart. And yet notwithstanding the Senate Committee on Commerce has for fifteen years been compelled to pay only about ten or fifteen days' attention to the river and harbor bill and the rest of the time at each session was left open to great commercial questions, the pilots have been permitted to pursue their piratical course, and thirty pilot ships in New York city have been permitted to lay up $30,000 every year net apiece at the expense of this dying American commerce.

The first time I came into the House I sent a bill to that committee for the repeal of compulsory pilotage. The pilots' body is a powerful body; it is a wonderful contrivance to exercise its power at call. It appeared in Washington. Every time an attempt has been made to repeal compulsory pilotage it has appeared in Washington. A committee which is compelled to obtain every vote possible to get two-thirds to suspend the rules to pass a bill dares not report a bill which has any respectable opposition to it, and that Committee on Commerce never reported a repeal of the pilotage law to that House from that day to this, and we could get no action upon it.

Mr. President, this same merchant marine of ours has been laboring, wallowing in the deep waves of a terrible sea for the last fifteen years, and Congress never has stretched out a hand to help her until the very last session. Away back in 1870, some one may say, the Committee on Commerce reported a bill making a rebate of duties on a few materials. To be sure the Committee on Commerce, my recollection is, did not do it. A special committee was raised, of which John Lynch, of Maine, was chairman, and that committee spent four or five months investigating the causes of this decline of American commerce. They reported to Congress, and Congress gave a rebate on a few imported materials that went into the building of a ship. It did not amount to a tub to a whale, and from that day—1870, I think it was—up to the last session of Congress the United States Government has stood by blindfolded, both hands clasped, and the American commerce has been going down and down and down, and the Committee on Commerce has not put out a hand to save it until, as I say, the last session of Congress.

I remember a bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce at the last session which provided for the inspection of foreign steamboats like our own, and another measure which provided for a different admeasurement of tonnage, giving us the same measurement, I believe, that the English have. I remember when the bill was reported I remarked in my place (and it went into the RECORD, though I did not expect it to go there), "The first gun for the American commerce." I remember that the Committee on Commerce then did not take the initiative. I remember that a special committee was appointed, made up of members of the Committee on Commerce I admit, an excellent body, and that they spent time, and they investigated and they reported a bill which if it had passed would have done infinite good, but a similar bill coming from the House over here was amended in the Senate and it could not pass both branches of Congress at such a late hour. That was the work of a special committee. It was ably done; the investigation was thorough, was complete; and the Senators on that committee did everything in their power—the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] being at the head of it and in charge of the bill—to do what could be done.

But while I concede that this Committee on Commerce did that one thing, where have the Committees on Commerce been in the last fifteen years? What have they been doing? Do they say to me that they had no power to originate? I say the Committee on Commerce should be made up of men who understand thoroughly and completely commercial questions, questions affecting the mercantile marine, questions affecting the building of ships, and it is their duty when we have no boards of trade; it is their duty when we have no trinity-house; it is their duty when we have no other support to originate measures both in the Senate and in the House and send them to their own committee for consideration and bring them back with the weight of their authority. Show me any single instance in fifteen years where a Committee on Commerce has done this. It can not be found. Why, Mr. President? I come back to my original proposition; why? Because in the House of Representatives the Committee on Commerce is made up for one single purpose, with one central idea, the river and harbor bill, and that river and harbor bill having been the inducement of the Commerce Committee for fifteen years, it has had its logical effect that whoever makes up the Committees on Commerce in the House or Senate has in view the monumental column of the river and harbor bill, and not the numerous widespread complaints and troubles connected with our general commerce.

The Senator from Texas says the committee has had ample time—the Committee on Commerce meets once a week, I believe on Thursday, at 10 o'clock—ample time; only a week per session for the river and harbor bill! Show me, Mr. President, where the Committee on Commerce has undertaken in that ample time to relieve American commerce, to restore our commerce to the ocean, to do those things that ought to be done in the interest of the whole country.

Sir, the only purpose I had when I asked a division of this committee was that there might be one committee whose sole jurisdiction should be commercial questions, whose sole work might be determining these very questions that are pressing upon us as they press to-day in this Republic; the committee itself should know that the United States Senate had made it a distinct and separate committee with this one power, and the committee then should devote its time, its intellect, its power to devising ways and means to restore us our American commerce.

In 1854 Great Britain passed her great maritime shipping act. It occupies perhaps sixty or eighty pages of her statute-book; and she provided in her act for every existing necessity of the merchant marine as far as the finite eye of man could see. She made her trinity-house at London; she made her great board of trade; she created a marine court in every seaport of Great Britain; she connected them with iron bands; she allowed appeals from the lower to the higher; she gave them unusual powers of making regulations in the interest of commerce equal to laws passed by the English Parliament; and she required them to report one to the other, and a final report from the central board to Parliament every session it had; and then Parliament took the reports and proceeded to enact whatever was necessary to help Great Britain in her onward march to gain the victory over the whole world in her merchant shipping career; and that Parliament, every single session from 1854 to now, has been considering questions affecting the merchant marine of Great Britain and at almost every session has enacted laws; and the merchant marine of Great Britain has grown until to-day it is more powerful than all the rest of the wide world, until to-day it controls the trade and commercial affairs of nearly the whole world, until to-day it carries all the mails (with a few feeble exceptions) of the United States of America to every foreign port; until to-day it carries 85 per cent. of our freight and our passengers abroad and brings our imports home. Why? Because Congress has not taken care of the interest of American shipping; because boards of trade, and trinity-houses, and marine courts, with their boards and their councils, have been at work day in and day out, in season and out of season, to help Great Britain to her position of power; and while we have sat here and seen her forcing herself onward until she controls the world, what have we done? Sat here in blind amazement, utterly paralyzed, weak as infants, and seen her strip our power from us.

Mr. President, while I admire the power of Great Britain, while I admire her steadiness of purpose, while I admire the manner in which she has gone to work and built herself up, yet I am constrained to say that she works for money always and everywhere. She fought us for more than fifty years because we owned slaves; in season and out of season she fought us. Then when there came a war, a war which was to affect slavery, preserve it or destroy it, she saw her opportunity to take from us our growing power on the ocean. Forgetting all about her principle of anti-slavery, she supplied the whole South with munitions of war, with ships of every kind. We captured seven hundred and sixty-three of her blockade-runners, with twenty-six million dollars' worth of arms and powder. She fitted out her Alabamas; she joined with Spain and France in landing forces in Mexico, ready to march on us when occasion should require, and I do believe that if it had not been for that man Ericsson she would have dismembered this country and would have held the South to raise cotton and corn for her and open to her merchandise and her manufactures in return. But Providence raised up a man by the name of Ericsson. He built a little iron monitor, a little cheese-box, as it was called. We left the Merrimac down here in Virginia; the gentlemen of the confederacy raised it, armed it, put on armor and a ram, and our whole Navy was at her mercy in the twinkling of an eye; she sunk two of our ships. Down came Ericsson's little cheese-box, his little Monitor, and the Merrimac went ashore and was sunk, and Spain and England left France in Mexico to take care of herself, and England went home to look out for her commerce on the seas, and immediately she went over her navy at the expense of hundreds of millions of dollars, and our country was saved because England did not want to lose her commercial supremacy.

She would forget principle, she would forget slavery, she would forget all that she ought to have held dear to get a market for her manufactured goods, but she would sacrifice principle, anti-slavery feeling, market for goods, and everything to save her commercial marine, and she did it, and she has been at work at it ever since; and yet we stand by here and see England do it year after year, and if any attempt is made to build up our commercial marine, all that some Senator has to do is to fling out "subsidy" or "bounty," and then down goes any attempt to do anything to save ourselves.

Mr. President, I asked a division of the Committee on Commerce for one sole purpose, that while we had no trinity-houses and no boards of trade and no marine courts and no parliament behind us, we might have one committee whose interest it should be, whose purpose it should be, whose investigation it should be, in view of our present condition, to compel the attention of the two Houses of Congress to the proper remedies, and see if we could not do something for our salvation. There was no other purpose. I meant no reflection so far as I am concerned, and I know the Committee on Rules meant no reflection whatever upon the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, and I trust that that committee will not so treat it.

I have endeavored to give the reasons which actuated me in this recommendation. I hope they will commend themselves to the Senate, and that no personal feeling touching the making up of a committee certainly will affect any Senator's vote.

Mr. President, I ask the pardon of the Senate. I had not the remotest idea when I took the floor of making a speech of any such length as this. I have spoken in a random way, but I have spoken from a very deep and profound feeling that the day is now come when, if we are to do anything to save this great country and its mercantile marine, we must act; and to that end I have put myself in the position of seeming to criticise a committee of this body of which I have the honor to be a member.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I simply desire to correct an error into which my colleague [Mr. VEST] inadvertently fell in his remarks in regard to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. In the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses there was in the Senate a select committee on the Mississippi levees, and there was a corresponding committee in the House on the Mississippi levees. In the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress, at its first session, at my instance, in the Senate the select committee on the Mississippi levees was changed to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. That was at the called session in 1879. At the same session in the House a partial change was made in the committee there; it was changed to the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Prior to 1879 I had the honor of introducing a bill in the Senate for the creation of a Mississippi River Commission, the first bill of the kind ever introduced in the Senate. It necessarily had to go to the Committee on Commerce, and was returned to the Senate tacked on as an amendment to the river and harbor bill, and was disagreed to in the Senate, there being only some twenty-odd votes in favor of the measure.

Being somewhat conversant with the history of the effort to create the Mississippi River Commission, I know that there were bills introduced in the House to the same effect. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the junior Senator [Mr. GIBSON], then a member of the House, had, prior to the time when I introduced the bill in the Senate, introduced a bill in the House. I think he commenced as early as the Forty-fourth Congress, probably, introducing bills for the creation of the Mississippi River Commission, and they went to the Committee on Commerce in the House and no action was ever had on them.

After the creation of the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries in the Senate and the change of the committee in the House to a Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River in 1879, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] introduced in the House a bill, H. R. No. 1847, which was introduced in the House on the 10th of May, 1879, being a bill to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to the headwaters. That bill was in the House referred to the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River. It was reported back to the House favorably by that committee and passed and came to the Senate. In the Senate, June 3, 1879, it was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. June 6th it was reported back from that committee with amendments and was discussed in the Senate, and very soon afterward passed by a vote of yeas 48 to nays 4. That bill as amended was returned to the House, the amendments were concurred in there, and the Mississippi River Commission was created by that law coming from those two committees, and it has originated the system and plan of works which are now being carried out and which promise to give us permanent navigable water in that river. I simply desire to say that the Mississippi River Commission owed its existence to these two committees in the Senate and House, and I claim that that commission has originated the whole system of works which promise such great results.

In the subsequent Congress there was no change made in the House. In the last Congress my distinguished colleague introduced one or two bills for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the Missouri River. They were referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, and that committee reported back to the Senate Senate bill No. 1572 for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, which appropriated $5,000,000 for he improvement of the Mississippi River and $1,000,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River; and the bill passed the Senate almost unanimously on the 25th of April, 1882. It went to the House, and there, under the rules of the House, the Select Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River did not have jurisdiction of it. I do not remember to what committee it was referred, but the House refused to take any action upon the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. It was not referred at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Louisiana advises me that it was not referred to any committee. If the House had had a committee corresponding to the Senate committee, a committee on the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and that committee had had jurisdiction of the bill, it would have passed the House and appropriations would have been made sufficient to have carried on the work of the improvement of the Mississippi River under the plans of the Mississippi River Commission up to this time.

Mr. President, I simply rose to say this as a mere matter of justice and right to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries in the Senate. When I came to the Senate in 1875 it was the Committee on the Mississippi Levees, and I was made a member of it; I had it changed to the Committee on the Mississippi River and its Tributaries in 1879, and have continuously been a member of the committee up to this time. I think that committee, whether there was any necessity for it or not, has been of great service to the country and has faithfully discharged its duties. I do not intend this as a response to any argument that my colleague has made——

Mr. VEST. I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. But simply as an explanation, because I knew that my colleague was not familiar with it.

Mr. VEST. In what I said or intended to say I was very unfortunate if I made the impression that I was criticising the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries. I highly appreciate the personnel of that committee and its labors; but I said this, and the record shows it, that as to the appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River they have come from the Committee on Commerce, and I said, in order to emphasize that statement, that the money that went to the improvement of this great river had come from the Committee on Commerce and upon its recommendation and from that committee alone. I admit the usefulness of the Mississippi River Commission, and I am glad to acknowledge that it was created by the action of any committee of this body, but the other facts remain as I stated them.

Mr. President, I do not propose to go into a discussion of American shipping or of the late war. I was in hopes that there was one subject under heaven and among men that could be discussed in this body without opening up hostility again between the United and the confederate states, but it seems utterly impossible to bring up anything here, even a change of the rules of the Senate, unless we "fight all our battles o'er again, and thrice we rout our foes and thrice we slay the slain." What has the Merrimac got to do with this question or Ericsson's "cheese-box," or whether the Merrimac went down amid shot and shell or under stress of weather? This is a question in regard to abolishing the functions of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, and the imagination of the Senator from Maine alone could have brought into the question hostilities which ceased near twenty years ago.

If there is one thing necessary to add force to the present tendency to materialism on the part of the American people it is accuracy of statement. The Senator from Maine and myself had two issues of fact and of memory. One was in regard to a bill with reference to the Potomac flats, which he said was passed by the Senate and went to the House. No such bill was ever passed. The second statement he made, and the impression he desired to make on the Senate and the country, was that the decline of American shipping commenced with hostilities in 1861. I say that the reports from the Treasury Department show no such thing. They show, on the other hand, that American shipping commenced its decline in 1840, and after a slight revival in 1852 and 1853 it finally proceeded to go down-hill in 1855 until it almost touched bottom in 1883. I have before me the official reports of the Treasury Department and we shall see who is correct. In 1840 the American carrying trade amounted to 82.9 per cent.; in 1845, 81.7; in 1850, 72.5; in 1855, 75.6, an increase of 3.1; in 1860, 66.5; in 1865, 27.7. I hold in my hand the report made in the House of Representatives by a colleague of the distinguished Senator, ex-Governor Dingley, of Maine, who has given to this subject, I take pleasure in saying, the most accurate and exhaustive research, in which he puts the decline of American shipping properly from 1855 in these words:

> The decline of our foreign carrying trade dates from 1855, although the causes which produced it gathered volume so slowly as to attract little attention for several years. What these causes were appears from an investigation of the maritime history of the commercial world, and particularly of England, between 1840 and 1860. Up to 1850-'55, the ocean trade was carried on exclusively in wooden sailing vessels.

I do not propose to go into this question now. I am ready at any other time to discuss it; not now, for it is not pertinent to the inquiry before the Senate; but I tell the gentleman, and I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would join me in my conclusions, that after taking testimony for weeks upon this question, after examining every authority pro and con in regard to it, it was not compulsory pilotage that destroyed our merchant marine, it was not seamen's wages, but it was the fact that England ascertained that wooden American sailing vessels made by the constituents of my honorable friend from Maine were superior to hers; that the American clipper vessels could not be competed with by Great Britain; and immediately that great people utilized their coal-beds and their iron, which were lying together upon the verge of the ocean, and commenced the construction of iron steamships. From that time on, not from the commencement of the war but from 1855, from the very time that England commenced this construction, the foreign carrying trade of the world and of the United States went into her hands. It is true the war accelerated the decline, but the primary cause of the whole of it was not in compulsory pilotage, not in any of the insect causes which the gentleman alludes to, but it was in the great fundamental cause that England, always true with her intellect and her resources to her interests, seized upon the great fact that her coal, her iron, and her cheap labor enabled her to build iron vessels much cheaper than could be done in the United States. That is all I desire, however, to say upon that subject.

Mr. President, in conclusion it simply amounts to this: The Senator's whole argument and statement, boiled down and sifted and compacted, is in the single sentence that the Committee on Commerce can not attend to this great subject of the foreign commerce and merchant marine of the United States, and yet he admits in the same breath that the only action taken in Congress for fifteen years which has amounted to anything was taken by the same Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress. The records show that I reported a bill here as the organ of the Committee on Commerce and urged its passage, a bill which I again introduced on the first day of this session of Congress and had referred to the same committee. The Senator admits that members of the Committee on Commerce have labored laboriously and assiduously, and yet he says he has no reflection on the Committee on Commerce. He does not mean to say that it has not done its duty, but he does mean to say that he would take away from it this subject upon which it has labored for months and months and give it into the hands of a new committee created by the Committee on Rules, because (if there is force in English language and meaning in English words) the Committee on Commerce has not done its duty to the subject of the decline of American shipping. I say that the Committee on Commerce has done its duty, and I say that this report made by members of the Committee on Commerce jointly with the committee on the part of the House embraces every particle of information accessible to the Senator or to any one else upon this great question.

That is all I desire to say. I hope that the Senate in voting upon the question will exclude any idea that any personal feeling on the part of members of the Committee on Commerce has entered into the discussion. All we ask is that justice and the public interests may be consulted and subserved.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one word in reply. I stated that American tonnage reached its height in 1861 according to my best recollection. I had not the reports by me; I had not examined any in reference to this debate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] says that I am mistaken; that our carrying trade began to decrease before 1860. I admit that an iron steamship will carry five where a sailing vessel will carry one; but my statement was absolutely correct by the same report. If the Senator had turned to page 2 of the same report he would have found that in 1860 the American tonnage engaged in the foreign carrying trade reached 2,379,396 tons, and that in 1855 it had reached 2,348,358 tons. I think that justifies my statement that American tonnage was at its height in 1861. I made it expressly as to tonnage, and not as to the freight-carrying capacity of the vessels, recognizing, as I do fully recognize, the invention of steam, and also extra compound engines and the screw and all that sort of thing, as having very much to do with the decline of American commerce. I recognize those facts.

The Senator from Missouri did me injustice in another thing. I know perfectly well that pilotage had not all to do with this, nor two months' advance wages nor three months' wages exacted by consuls nor all these little things; but the little things together helped. My point was that we had not undertaken up to the last Congress to remove anything which tended to hurt us.

The Senator does me injustice in another respect. He says that I brought in the hostility of the war when that was all over. It was the remotest from my mind; never such an idea entered my head. I am entirely willing to say to the Senator what suggested the remarks I made. It was the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] sitting right here before me. His nativity suggested it. I was talking entirely without notes or thought, and when I saw him sitting in front of me the course England had pursued towards Ireland occurred to me, and at once there flashed into my mind the course that England had pursued towards us for her pecuniary benefit.

I alluded to those hostilities and to her withdrawal from Mexico and to her hastening home and fitting out those ships simply to show that she regarded her mercantile marine as of greater consequence to her as a nation than any question of principle or even any question of market for her goods. That is the only reason why I referred to it, and I trust that no Senator on that side supposes that I was undertaking to rake up hostilities. Hostilities I do not care anything about; they have gone by, I hope, forever; we have got through with them; but I do not think that so far as England is concerned they are forgotten or will be forgotten readily; and I do think, if ever the opportunity comes, the United States, notwithstanding it received the paltry sum of $15,500,000, will exact higher wages and profounder penalties than that for the wrongs committed upon us simply as a question of money. My argument was that England would sacrifice everything else for her commercial marine, and that we would not sacrifice anything, not even the division of a penny.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has enlarged this discussion very much indeed by bringing before the attention of the Senate the decline of the American marine. The bearing of that question upon the amendment of the rules of the Senate, it seems to me, is very remote, and I think very many of the remarks of the Senator on this occasion had just as little to do with the question now before the Senate.

The Senator seems to have been dealing very largely with his experience in some other legislative body. He seems to have been impressed by the state of affairs in some other body than the Senate as requiring a division of the labors of the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate has nothing to do, under the practice of the Senate, with originating or framing the bill making appropriations for the rivers and harbors of the country, generally known as the river and harbor bill. According to the practice of these legislative bodies that bill, with all such general appropriation bills, originates in the House of Representatives. The whole time occupied in framing that bill is spent by members of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce there, so that we have no time consumed in originating or framing the bill. It comes to us as a bill passed by the House. Of the items embraced in the river and harbor bill three-fourths of them fully are old subjects of appropriation, appropriations for the continuance of improvements, further appropriations in regard to improvements which have been originated years before and have been year after year before the consideration of the Senate, and with which the members of the Committee on Commerce are always familiar.

When the river and harbor bill comes to the Senate the practice of the Committee on Commerce has been, as I have heretofore stated, to examine the bill thoroughly in general committee. It is not referred to a subcommittee. The report of the Chief of Engineers, transmitted by the Secretary of War, embraces not only his report, but the report of the engineers of the United States Army in charge of the district embracing the improvement, and it also includes a report from a subordinate officer to the engineer in charge. These reports state distinctly and fully the character of each improvement; they give the history of the improvement, the effect of the improvement, not only upon the locality, the stream, or the harbor, but the effect upon commerce, the tonnage of the locality; and every fact which would enter into a consideration of the subject of appropriating for an improvement as affecting commerce is embraced within the reports. These are all separately examined, and the committee either recommend the items as sent to them in the House bill or amend it, according to their pleasure. That bill, with such examination, is reported to the Senate for its action, and so far as the Senate is concerned the remark of the Senator from Maine that discussion does not take place, that it is passed by any two-thirds vote, or that any limitation is placed upon the debate, does not apply to the Senate of the United States. The warmest and most ample discussions have taken place in the Senate upon river and harbor bills; the bill has always been considered and discussed here as long as it was the pleasure of the Senate to discuss or consider it; there has been no limitation upon the debate, and for one I would oppose any rule which the Senator from Maine favors imposing the previous question upon the Senate, either upon the river and harbor bill or upon any other bill. These remarks, therefore, while they may be applicable to the House of Representatives, do not apply to the Senate in any respect, and whatever the experience of the Senator from Maine may have been elsewhere he never will have that experience here.

With reference to the natural jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce it would seem that the rivers and harbors of the country, the channels of the commerce of the country, should be in all respects under the supervision of that committee. These are the channels upon which our internal commerce is carried, as well as the foreign commerce coming to our ports. All seem to be naturally under the supervision of that committee. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests, all our exports of cotton and all our foreign imports must come to our ports and harbors here. We are exporting largely wheat and even flour, and in these directions it is to be hoped that our commerce will be largely increased in some of the items certainly, if we can form a proper commercial treaty with Spain affecting the island of Cuba. All these matters naturally come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, and if the attention of that committee is to be directed to the commerce of the country everything affecting that commerce would follow.

So far as the internal commerce of the country is concerned I have some knowledge of the action of the Committee on Commerce in regard to it. Our whole interests are not involved in a merchant marine, although that is a large interest of the country of course; but our great commerce is our internal commerce. That is the great body of the commerce of this country, and it is that portion of it which is increasing and will increase.

Mr. FRYE. Why?

Mr. McMILLAN. Because we have the facilities within ourselves for carrying on that commerce between our own ports, between our cities, our manufactories, all the branches of industry, the agricultural products of the country being transported in every direction.

So much for what should be naturally within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce. Now, what has been the action of the Committee on Commerce in regard to all the branches of our commerce and our carrying trade? During the last Congress the Committee on Commerce made to the Senate eighty reports, embracing all kinds of subjects within its jurisdiction; and the interests of the merchant marine were by no means neglected. The bill already referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] was reported from the committee and was fully considered and very generally debated here. The committee having reported the bill to the Senate, it was taken up on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. In addition to that, it is well remembered what grievous complaints were made of the treatment of foreign immigrants coming to this country upon our vessels, such as to shock humanity; and at the last session of Congress one of the most effective and beneficial bills was reported to the Senate and passed by the Senate and by both Houses of Congress upon that subject, securing and protecting them against the oppressions and hardships of disease and death which attended immigration here owing to the crowds of people that came upon our vessels.

In addition to that the Life-Saving Service was remodeled to a considerable extent. Very material and important changes were made in that service, and by a bill considered and reported by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. The bill was discussed very fully, and with some very slight amendments it was passed as reported from the committee.

License fees were reduced by reports from the Committee on Commerce at the last session. The inspection of steam-vessels was considered. A bill was reported on the subject by the Committee on Commerce putting foreign vessels on the same footing to a certain extent with our own in their ports. Very material alterations and changes in the law affecting our vessels abroad and the vessels of foreign nations in our ports were made. Coasting licenses have been reduced and license fees in other directions. A bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce providing for ship-canals between the two oceans, and although it was not a unanimous report from that committee, the question was very fully considered and a report was presented to the Senate. The action of the Senate upon it was urged time and again by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senate as often refused to consider it. So in every direction the shipping interests and the coasting interests have been considered and have been protected and improved so far as the regulations concerning navigation are concerned. With reference to our internal commerce, by an amended bill from the Committee on Commerce our merchants can now import their goods from abroad into any interior port in the country and have the appraisement and collection of duties at their own homes. Importation is not confined now to one or two ports of the country, but the imports can be taken to any of the interior ports of the country where there are a collector and appraiser or the customs officers proper to discharge those duties.

I do not believe that the Committee on Rules intended to reflect particularly upon the Committee on Commerce, but if they did, I answer that the records of the Committee on Commerce refute any such charge, and establish the fact that the Committee on Commerce have labored as faithfully and performed their duties as diligently as any committee in this or any other body, and I appeal to the record. Now that the Senator from Maine is a member of that committee what diligence are we assured will characterize its future labors? What care will be taken of the merchant marine? Certainly all the commercial interests of the country will be cared for.

The Senator from Maine has had much experience elsewhere, if not here; and if he will forget his bitter experience elsewhere and will just confine his attention to the Senate, I think he will have no reason whatever to complain of the Committee on Commerce. Its meetings have been as regular as the week's return; its attendance has been as full as that of any committee of the Senate; rarely are absences found on the day of meeting. As far as that committee is concerned I feel highly honored in being associated with the gentlemen who compose the committee and who have composed it since I have been a member of it.

So far as compulsory pilotage is concerned, how can that affect our merchant marine? It is levied upon the vessels, and if our foreign commerce is carried in foreign bottoms it must pay the compulsory pilotage. It comes upon them all. There are differences of opinion in regard to whether there should be compulsory pilotage or not. It affects the question of the insurance of vessels. That of itself would go to affect the building up of a merchant marine. The States having charge of that question regulate it in view of sanitary measures, the protection of life in their own harbors. If vessels laden with passengers come into dangerous ports under the direction of pilots who know nothing of the harbors, what loss of life may there not be? These things are all to be considered when you come to discuss these questions; and if there has been delay, it has not been on the part of the Committee on Commerce.

I can see no reason why there should be a division of this labor. In the other branch of the National Legislature there are three committees that do the work of the Finance Committee of the Senate. The rule applying to this body does not require a division of the duties of the Committee on Finance, and whatever may be required there, whatever may be proper there, whatever may conduce to the disposition of business there, has no applicability here. We are to determine our rules by our own circumstances and necessities.

So far as the river and harbor bill is concerned, I am willing to let the action of the Committee on Commerce in regard to that bill rest upon the past record. It has been the custom to charge upon the river and harbor bill great irregularities. I think myself that those charges have arisen from the fact that general debate has not been allowed upon it where it should have been, in the House of Representatives. That does not apply here. I have never yet seen, by those who charge that the appropriations in the river and harbor bill have been ill-advised, any criticism or specification that would not apply to every other appropriation bill, and more generally than to the river and harbor bill.

There may be items that might be left out of the river and harbor bill; there may have been instances where an appropriation was not necessary. I remember appropriations made for improvements in the State of Delaware, and there were criticisms against the bill for appropriations made to that State. If the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] alludes to that as any "scandal" about the river and harbor bill, I can only say that those appropriations were all considered and reported upon and recommended by the engineers in charge of the improvements in that State. The river and harbor bill will be found to be one of the most beneficial appropriations that can be made in the improvement and enlargement of our commerce. The improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries is in charge of a special committee, and properly so. It is one continuous channel that goes through the entire country, north and south, and coming from the northwest is the Missouri River. That work is being conducted successfully, and will soon I am sure result in great benefits to every section of the country.

With these remarks, Mr. President, I trust the Senate will conclude to keep the rule, so far as the Committee on Commerce is concerned, as it has been.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I do not rise to make any defense of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, for I do not think it needs any, and if it does need any, it has already been given by the chairman of that committee and by the honorable member from Missouri. Laying aside all the criticisms which have been made on the Committee on Commerce by the honorable Senator from Maine, the only reasons I have heard given for the creation of this new committee are simply that the Committee on Commerce——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly, if the Senator having the measure in charge does not desire to continue it further at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator yields for that purpose I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I said I would yield if it was the desire of the Senator from Maine, who has this measure in charge, that it should now go over.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we shall not take another day on this matter.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that I do not intend to occupy more than two or three minutes at the furthest, and I do not know whether there are any other Senators who desire to discuss the question or not. Am I to understand from the Senator from Maine that he desires to continue this question now or to abandon it for the present? I get no response; so I shall proceed.

I was saying that the only reason I have heard given by the honorable Senator from Maine, or any other gentleman who has spoken, for the creation of the new committee, is that the present Committee on Commerce has not sufficient time to carry on the entire business which heretofore has been committed to it for its action. If that criticism be correct, I do not understand how the amendment to the present rules proposed by the Committee on Rules will in any way advance the business of this body, or that it can in any way create another committee which will have more time or greater opportunities to give to the consideration of the questions which may come before the committee. As has been said here, the river and harbor bill, which is the only measure of importance that is to be committed to the new committee on internal improvements, does not receive any consideration from the hands of any committee of this body or the body itself until it comes to the Senate from the House of Representatives. As a result of that course of action the Committee on Commerce of the Senate has the larger part of every session of the Senate for the consideration of the general subjects pertaining to commerce and navigation, and heretofore it has not been negligent in the discharge of those duties. The river and harbor bill reaches that committee usually during the third month of the session, and the committee is then prepared to go on with the consideration of that measure, and, as the chairman has said, it does it almost without interruption during the day and holding many night sessions. How, if a new committee shall be created, it will be found to work any benefit I am not able to see.

The present distribution of the members of the Senate upon the various committees is such that nearly every Senator in this body is a member of four committees. If a new committee shall be created, the nine members who are to go upon the new committee will find that they are upon five committees instead of four; and in what way their powers will be increased, in what way they will find more opportunity, more time, or more ability to consider these questions when the committee has been divided and their labors increased I am not able to see. If the rule that the Senator from Maine has brought in had provided that every Senator going upon this new committee should cease to be a member of all other committees, and should give all his time to the consideration of the one question of river and harbor improvements, then I can readily understand that the question coming before that committee would receive more consideration than it would under any other system; but there is no such proposition as that, and of course no such proposition as that would be entertained for a moment.

It seems to me, then, that instead of facilitating the business of the Committee on Commerce, or instead of facilitating the business of the other committees of this body, this action will be in directly the opposite direction, for certainly every Senator knows that if the business coming before four committees was to come before only two committees, he would have more time and more opportunity to consider it than he does when it is divided among so many different committees.

I see nothing, then, in this proposition which will in any way facilitate the business of this body. If I did I should most gladly give my consent to the amendment as it is proposed. There may be something in this consideration which I present to the Senate. All the appropriation bills for the carrying on of the Government, for the expenses of all the Departments, now go to one committee, the Committee on Appropriations, save this one bill, the river and harbor bill, which under our rules is committed to the Committee on Commerce. Why was that bill made an exception? I will not attempt to go back to the history of the creation of these rules, but I conceive it to be simply because it was believed by the Senate that the Committee on Commerce, which during all the session is considering the various questions relating to commerce that come before it, would of necessity in the consideration of these other questions which come before it obtain much information which would assist it in properly appropriating money for our rivers and harbors.

It was believed undoubtedly that it would come into the possession of much knowledge which could not and would not under the ordinary course of affairs in the Senate come to any other committee and information which would not be obtained by any other Senators. I venture to say that my short experience on that committee leads me to believe that the Committee on Commerce is much better prepared to deal with this subject than any other committee can be, because during the ordinary exercise of the duties of that committee the committee is constantly receiving information by letter and by individuals appearing before it from different parts of the country upon other subjects which necessarily bring in the question of the improvement of the various rivers and harbors. For instance, it is not uncommon that there are appearing before that committee gentlemen from various parts of our country, from Galveston and from San Francisco and from Oregon, upon questions pertaining to the commerce of those districts, and at the same time they are able to give the committee much information in relation to the condition of those harbors and much information in relation to the condition of many of the rivers in their various States.

No other committee would be able to obtain this information in the same way or with the same facility that the Committee on Commerce can do; and the result of it all is that when the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors comes to this body from the other House and goes to the Committee on Commerce, that committee finds itself, by the very force of circumstances, already possessed of a large amount of information which has come to it in its ordinary business, which enables it to decide upon the appropriations for certain rivers and harbors with greater facility and greater knowledge, I believe, than any other committee possibly could do. I have no doubt that if the river and harbor bill should be referred to an independent committee and to a separate committee composed of Senators from this body, that committee would not be able to give it the careful consideration which the Committee on Commerce does give to it; and for that reason I believe that it is unwise to make this division. Nevertheless, if the Senate shall think that the duties of the Committee on Commerce are so onerous that it can not go on with its ordinary labor and still retain this jurisdiction, for one I have no objection to the change; but my experience leads me to believe that it would be most unwise to make the division.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Maine does not insist upon going on with the consideration of the rules, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey to yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. I will not insist on proceeding with the rules unless such be the desire of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call attention to the fact that the fourth week of this session has now gone by, with the exception of one day, if we do, as we have so often, adjourn over on Thursday. The time is just as valuable as it will be in midsummer, and it seems to me that this measure, which consists of making a few clearly understood changes to the rules, ought not to occupy many weeks more of our time. It seems to me if we can stay here ten or fifteen minutes we may get a vote on the question and get this out of the way, and proceed to other legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 27 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 9, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House that the reading of that portion of the Journal relating to the formal introduction of bills be omitted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The remainder of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was then read and approved.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST EXPORTED DOMESTIC PRODUCTS.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, owing to necessary absence I ask the indulgence of the House to present at this time the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it appears that certain foreign governments with which the Government of the United States has commercial treaties securing to the United States the treatment assured to the most favored nations in respect to the importation of American produce and manufactures have, in apparent violation of such treaties, prohibited the introduction within their territory of certain food products of the United States under regulations not applied to like products of other nations: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs are hereby instructed to inquire into the facts respecting the same and to report to the House by bill or otherwise as early as practicable what legislation or other action should be taken by Congress or the Executive to assure the due observance of such treaties and to protect the rights of the people of the United States in respect thereto, whether by retaliatory legislation or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPORTATION OF AMERICAN PORK.

Mr. DEUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the German and French Governments have prohibited the importation of American pork for alleged sanitary reasons; and

Whereas the agricultural and commercial interests of this country are considerably affected thereby: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce is hereby requested to investigate the alleged reasons for said prohibition and report to this House and recommend such legislation as may seem warranted by the facts found.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If in order——

The SPEAKER. The first question is whether the House will give unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to reserve the right to object after making a statement. This question has already been placed before the Committee on Ways and Means by a joint resolution introduced by myself on the first bill day of this session, the 10th day of December last. Indeed, I inaugurated this movement by joint resolution in February last, when it was then referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. That question, therefore, is now being considered by the Ways and Means Committee. I have no objection to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin if it be referred to that committee; on the contrary, I heartily favor it, as it follows and seeks to accomplish what I have so long desired done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must object or not object to the consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Because this has been already referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs I shall object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the reason I have stated.

Mr. DEUSTER. I do not care where it is referred, so that the House may be informed of the facts and obtain a report upon the subject with a view to legislation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall not object to the resolution, but insist that it shall go to the Committee on Ways and Means, which committee unquestionably has prior jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. DEUSTER. I did not object when the gentleman from Illinois introduced his resolution; I hope he will not object to this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not object to the resolution. My only desire is that it shall be referred to the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be an objection. The gentleman can not make conditional objections, as the Chair could not dispose of an objection of such a character.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Suppose we consent to the present consideration of the resolution and allow the House to determine for itself its reference.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the House considers the resolution it has power either to refer or dispose of it otherwise or modify or adopt it in its present form.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. With that understanding, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is then before the House for its action as to the reference.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DEUSTER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend by referring it to the Committee on Ways and Means, and I wish to repeat that the subject is already before that committee, and it should still continue to have jurisdiction of the subject.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate allowed on the motion to refer.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. KASSON. I ask permission simply to make a statement, and that in the hearing of the gentleman from Illinois, and that is that the whole question rests upon a violation of our treaty. I know that for three years correspondence has taken place in the foreign office respecting the duties of foreign governments under their treaties; and I think owing to the fact within my knowledge that protests have been made by one of our foreign ministers reserving the rights of the United States to claim damages under the treaty, the gentleman from Illinois will agree it is right to refer this matter to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which must communicate on the subject with the foreign office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable. The Chair, however, permitted the gentleman from Iowa to make a brief statement, no objection being made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the indulgence of the House to be permitted to say a word in reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indulge the gentleman if no objection is made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe this relates more to customs duties than it does to treaty stipulations. It certainly affects the customs regulations of this country and of France and Germany. The legislation of those two foreign countries is a species of protective tariff legislation in the interest of the home producers of those countries, oppressive to the consumers of those lands and the corn and pork producers of this country.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is a violation of treaty.

Mr. KASSON. By decree of the Government.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The action in Germany was by the parliament of that country, and in France it emanated from the French assembly. Now, I wish to say, with all due deference to what has been said by my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], and also with great respect to the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, that in questions affecting customs duties I am of the opinion the Committee on Ways and Means will be better able than the Committee on Foreign Affairs to determine, because the attention of the former committee is being constantly directed to questions affecting regulation of foreign imports, while the Committee on Foreign Affairs is mainly occupied with our political relations with foreign governments. And I think the object which the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself have in view will be better promoted by a reference of this resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means than by its reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The gentleman from Illinois moves an amendment, that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The question is first on the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. May I ask that the resolution be again read?

The SPEAKER. It has already been read twice. But if there be no objection it will be again read.

There was no objection, and the resolution was again read.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Chair allow me to say a word?

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the pending motion so that the resolution shall go to the Committee on Commerce, where it properly belongs.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN'S amendment, there were—ayes 100, noes 94.

Several members called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us take the vote by tellers rather than by yeas and nays.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs was mine, and I think the question is settled by the vote of the House. It is not a matter of very much consequence to which committee the resolution shall go, inasmuch as I think three committees already have the matter under consideration—the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Commerce, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and inasmuch as the subject-matter is already before all the three committees, I hope we may have a report from one or the other.

The SPEAKER. Are the yeas and nays demanded?

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken, the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is agreed to; and the question is now on agreeing to the motion as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to, and the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask consent to submit for reference the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all laws of the Federal Government authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquors in States by wholesale or retail should be made dependent on the party so authorized first obtaining license therefor from the State authorities, in accordance with the laws thereof, where said traffic is to be carried on; and that the Federal laws now existing in relation thereto are contrary to good and wise police regulations in the States on that subject; and

Be it further resolved, That the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic be, and is hereby, instructed to report a bill to this House repealing all such laws, and further, requiring all parties applying for such authority to any Federal official to file with his application the proper State license for such traffic in every case where a State license is necessary therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction for reference of the resolution which has just been read?

Mr. DEUSTER. I object.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. On Monday, December 10, I introduced a bill (H. R. 39) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A part of the legislative history of that reservation is that by the act of Congress passed February 24, 1871, it was transferred from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War to that of the Secretary of the Interior, under whose control it has remained to the present time. If I had stated this fact at the time the bill was introduced, I am quite sure it would have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

I am also authorized to state that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to which I desire the bill to go, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs agree that the proper reference is to the Committee on Public Lands. I ask that the bill be so referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression that this was still a part of the military reservation, and therefore sent the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs. To what committee does the gentleman desire now that the bill shall be referred?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. To the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the change of reference? The Chairs hears none, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a memorial I now hold in my hand, signed by numerous citizens of the western judicial district of Arkansas, urging Congress to provide a public building for court, revenue, post-office, and other public purposes at Fort Smith, Ark. I ask to have the same printed in the RECORD, omitting the names of course. The memorial contains important statistics which I desire to bring to the attention of the House.

There was no objection; and the memorial and accompanying exhibit was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States for a Federal court and post-office building and a United States jail at Fort Smith, Ark.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, citizens of the western judicial district of Arkansas, respectfully represent that the United States district court of the said district is now and has for the past twelve years been held in the city of Fort Smith, in the western portion of the State of Arkansas. The said district embraces within its jurisdiction the counties of Benton, Boone, Carroll, Logan, Crawford, Franklin, Howard, Johnson, Little River, Madison, Montgomery, Marion, Newton, Polk, Sevier, Sebastian, Scott, Washington, and Yell, in the State of Arkansas, and criminal jurisdiction over the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole nations of the Indian Territory.

The said district court, by act of Congress, embraces four terms each year, commencing respectively on the first Mondays in February, May, August, and November. The criminal docket and business of said court, by virtue of its jurisdiction over said Indian nations, embracing crimes from the lowest misdemeanors to capital felonies, is so enormous and considerable that in order to try all cases said court is practically in session the entire year, holding its session frequently at night, and often lapping over with cases from one term into the next, and even then it is only by close economy of time that the business can be disposed of.

During the year commencing on the 1st day of November, 1882, and ending on the 1st day of November, 1883, the following number of cases were tried and disposed of by said court, viz: Number of criminal cases pending November 1, 1882, 77; number commenced during the year ending November 1, 1883, 419; total number pending during the year, 496. Number tried and disposed of during the year, 425; remaining on docket November 1, 1883, 71. Number of civil cases on docket November 1, 1882, 86; number commenced during the year, 138; total number pending during the year, 224. Number disposed of during the year ending November 1, 1883, 92; remaining on the docket, 132. Of the number of criminals convicted there were 137 sentenced and transported to the house of correction at Detroit, Mich.—the costs of transportation alone being $5,706.60. From the 1st day of November, 1882, to November 1st, 1883, there were confined in the jail, under charge of crime over which said court had jurisdiction, 605 prisoners. Under the present system of management of the jail there is required a regular force of one jailor, two turnkeys, and seven guards, and, at times, one and two additional guards, at a total cost of about $600 per month. On the civil docket of said court there were cases to the number of 224 from the 1st day of November, 1882, to the 1st day of November, 1883, and the civil business of said court is rapidly increasing.

A thorough report and review of the business of said court has been compiled by Stephen Wheeler, esq., clerk of said court, a certified copy of which is here filed, marked exhibit "A," and made a part of this memorial. The said city of Fort Smith, where memorialists ask that said buildings be erected, is a growing and thriving city, showing a population of 3,100 by the census of 1880, and at this date having a population of not less than 8,000. Said city is centrally located in the territory over which said court has jurisdiction, lies upon the banks of the Arkansas River, one hundred and sixty-five miles above Little Rock, and seventy-five miles below Fort Gibson. There are now two railroads running to said city, to wit: the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railway, and the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad. The latter of said roads has already obtained an act of Congress granting the right of way through the Government reservation at Fort Smith, and memorialists are advised at an early date will continue said road through to some point in Texas, thus running entirely through said district. It will thus be seen that said city is easily accessible, is in a healthy locality, with a fine climate and good water supply. Memorialists further represent that said district court is now being held in one of the old remaining barracks buildings, situated in the old fort of the now abandoned military reservation, erected for that purpose and formerly used by the Government in which to quarter soldiers; said building is a low-roofed, Spanish-fashioned, story and a half high house, and a more unfit place in which to hold a court could hardly be imagined.

The jail in which the prisoners are kept consists of two large, low-roofed cellar rooms, extending all the way under the entire building. In these two cells are confined the prisoners, indiscriminately, without regard to race, color, condition, or crime, except when females are imprisoned, when it becomes necessary to employ additional guards to guard them in some outhouse or the garret story of the building. In the event an epidemic or contagious disease should break out in the jail the results would be appalling and without remedy. As an inevitable consequence, a disagreeable odor and stench arise from said jail, which pervade the whole building. The court is held in a room over said jail, on the first floor, about 40 by 60 feet, supported in the center by four posts, and ventilated only at each end. In the other part of the first story, over the said jail, are the offices of the clerk and the marshal, subdivided by plank temporary partitions. The entire structure is, by reason of long use and age, in a state of decay, inconvenient and ill-suited in its appointments, and totally unfitted for the purposes for which it is used. Your memorialists, therefore, pray that your honorable body appropriate a sufficient sum of money out of the Treasury to erect a suitable Federal court building and jail at said city of Fort Smith.

EXHIBIT A.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of Arkansas:

I, Stephen Wheeler, clerk of the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct statement of the business of the United States district court, western district of Arkansas, for the length of time stated, as taken from the records of said court.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court, at Fort Smith, in said district, this 8th day of December, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] STEPHEN WHEELER, Clerk.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WAIT. Two bills, House bill No. 138, for the relief of Weaver & Sterry, and House bill No. 140, for the relief of Recknagel & Co., were by inadvertence referred to the Committee on Claims. The object of the bills is to return money which was improperly collected from those parties in the form of duties, and I ask that the reference be changed to the Committee on Ways and Means, to which I suppose there will be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. LUNA. House joint resolution No. 63, appropriating money for the expenses of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, was referred to the Committee on Territories. It is an appropriation for the expenses of the Legislature of that Territory, and I think belongs to the Committee on Appropriations. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the reference be changed as I have indicated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN MAINE.

Mr. REED. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back with an amendment House bill No. 686, to fix the time for holding the district court of the United States in the district of Maine. I would inquire if it is in order to ask unanimous consent for the passage of the bill at this time, as it only changes the time of holding the court?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order at this time.

The bill, with the amendment, was accordingly placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 307) to provide for the payment of female nurses during the war, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ROSECRANS also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. 952) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the expenses of Indian wars in Nevada, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ROSECRANS also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. 238) to equalize bounties of soldiers of the war of the rebellion, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

Mr. CALKINS. Ever since the war closed the Committee on Military Affairs have always had jurisdiction of these bills. This is the first time since I have been a member of this House when the Committee on Military Affairs has reported back such a bill and asked a change of reference. In my judgment the Committee on Military Affairs is the proper committee to consider this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it should go to the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

Mr. ROSECRANS. It is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs that the bill should be considered by the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon discharging the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee was discharged accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion to refer the bill to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following bills, and moved that the committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay:

A bill (H. R. 291) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 306) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 356) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines;

A bill (H. R. 388) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 421) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 428) to equalize the bounties of all soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 492) to equalize the bounties of soldiers and others who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 1049) directing the payment of a bounty to John McDonald;

A bill (H. R. 1231) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 1233) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;

A bill (H. R. 1494) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union; and

A bill (H. R. 1512) to revive section 12 of the act of July 28, 1866, providing an additional bounty of $100 to certain volunteer soldiers of the Union.

There being no objection, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the above bills, and the same were referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEELE asked and obtained permission to submit the views of the minority of the committee at some future time, to be printed with the report of the majority.

TRIAL OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SLOCUM, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House a statement of the average number of commissioned officers in the United States Army during the period from the 4th of March, 1857, to March 4, 1861, and during the period from March 4, 1877, to March 4, 1881, together with a statement of the number tried by courts-martial during each period, the number of convictions, the list of cases in which the findings of the courts were disapproved or the sentences remitted or partially remitted; also a statement of the charges and specifications of which the officers were found guilty in cases in which the Executive clemency was exercised.

Mr. SLOCUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MUSTER AND PAY OF OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. 355) to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. 1134) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to patents; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1136, a bill (H. R. 3036) to enable the courts of the United States in the case of the improper grant of letters-patent by reason of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 1504) for the relief of Millia Staples; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEDDES also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back bills of the following titles; when the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1726) for the relief of R. B. Talfor and H. C. Ripley;

A bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Alexander D. Schenck; and

A bill (H. R. 97) for the relief of René E. De Russy.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. SLOCUM, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and to encourage the American foreign carrying trade; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order at the present time to ask leave for the printing of certain amendments to go with the bill just read?

The SPEAKER. Not at this moment.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN IOWA.

Mr. McCOID, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. 448) to fix the times for holding the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 1242) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of the passes between the affluents of the Upper Missouri and Columbia Rivers, for the purpose of ascertaining the distances between the navigable waters of said rivers and the practicability of uniting said rivers by canal or otherwise; when the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a resolution for the distribution of the President's annual message to the several committees of the House. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the resolution just referred to it.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now in order, unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desires that the House proceed with the consideration of the report made by him yesterday, and which was laid over by consent. If the gentleman desires to proceed with that, of course it is unfinished business, and must be disposed of before the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] can be entertained.

COMPENSATION OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and ask him whether he has any special desire as to the committee to which our report should go.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it legitimately belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection to that reference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report made yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HISCOCK], in reference to equalizing the salaries of the employés of the two Houses of Congress, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MORRISON] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution just reported providing for the reference of the President's message to the appropriate committees.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of a resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President and the documents which accompany it as relates to the public debt and the public revenues, to the national finances, to the revenue provisions of the reciprocity treaty with Hawaii and the commercial relations with foreign countries having connection with revenue questions, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the appropriation and expenditure of the public moneys be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to the currency and to national banking associations be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That so much as relates to the coinage and to the mints of the United States be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

That so much as relates to the regulation of interstate commerce, and to the regulation of international commerce, and the centennial exposition at New Orleans be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

That so much as relates to the improvement of rivers and harbors be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

That so much as relates to agriculture and the preservation of the forests be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to affairs between the Government of the United States and the governments of foreign nations, to the reorganization of the diplomatic and consular service, and to the violations of the laws regarding Chinese immigration, and pauper immigration from Great Britain be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much as relates to the Army and to providing an armament for defense on the seacoast be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That so much as refers to the Navy and to the reconstruction of the naval service be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

That so much as relates to postal affairs, and to the reduction of existing rates of postage, and to postal telegraphy be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

That so much as relates to public lands be referred to Committee on the Public Lands.

That so much as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

That so much as relates to the organization and government of the Territories, the substitution of national for Territorial government in Utah, and the establishment of government in Alaska be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

That so much as relates to the care and improvement of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

That so much as relates to the Pacific railroads, except as herein otherwise provided, be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

That so much as relates to illiteracy and to the extending of aid by the United States to promote education be referred to the Committee on Education.

That so much as relates to patents be referred to the Committee on Patents.

That so much as relates to the pensions and the prevention of frauds under pension laws be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

That so much as relates to civil-service reform be referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

That so much as relates to the revival of American ship-building be referred to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

That so much as relates to legislation in reference to Presidential succession be referred to the Committee on Law respecting Election of President and Vice-President.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the committee rise and report to the House with a favorable recommendation the resolution just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX, of New York, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration a resolution providing for the distribution of the President's annual message had directed him to report back the same with a recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution just reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, by unanimous consent, will lay before the House certain personal requests of members.

There was no objection, and leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HANCOCK, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

To Mr. KELLEY, until Monday next.

To Mr. KASSON, to fill a public engagement in Iowa on the 9th instant.

THOMAS M. HARBIN.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the petitions, papers, and claim of Thomas M. Harbin, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF TIME FOR HOLDING MAINE DISTRICT COURT.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I move, in order to reach for present consideration the bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court of Maine, reported back this morning from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, that the House proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first business on the House Calendar is the bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the regular terms of the district court of the district of Maine shall be held at the times and places following: At Portland, on the first Tuesday in February; at Bangor, on the first Tuesday in June; at Bath, on the first Tuesday in September; and at Portland, on the first Tuesday in December.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:
"The regular terms of the district court of the district of Maine, now held at Bangor on the fourth Tuesday, shall be held hereafter on the first Monday of June."

Mr. REED. I move that amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That all the testimony and all other papers relating to the rights of members to hold seats on this floor in contested cases now on file with the Clerk of the House or in his possession, and all memorials, petitions, and other papers now in possession of the House or under its control relating to the same cases, not otherwise referred, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Committee on Elections and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House certain Executive communications.

There was no objection.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION REPORT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith to the House of Representatives a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting the annual report of the Mississippi River Commission.

I take this occasion to invite the early attention of Congress to the continuation of the work on the Mississippi River which is being carried on under the plans of the commission. My sense of the importance of the improvement of this river, not only to the people of the Northwest but especially to the inhabitants of the Lower Mississippi Valley, has already been expressed in a special communication to the last Congress. The harvests of grain and cotton produced in the region bordering upon the Mississippi are so vast as to be of national importance, and the project now being executed for their cheap transportation should be sufficiently provided for.

The commission report that the results due to the still uncompleted works have been remarkable and give the highest encouragement for expecting the ultimate success of the improvement.

The act of August 2, 1882, appropriated $4,123,000 for the work on that part of the river below Cairo. The estimates of the commission already transmitted to Congress call for $3,000,000 for the continuation of the work below Cairo, and it appears from their report that all of the last appropriation available for active operations has been exhausted, and that there is urgently needed an immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue the work without loss of time, in view of the approach of the flood season, with its attendant dangers.

I therefore recommend to Congress the early passage of a separate bill on this subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 8, 1884.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the President's message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. KING. I move its reference to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. These communications have sometimes been referred to the one committee and sometimes to the other, and the Chair would be glad to have the House dispose of the question for itself.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the rule say?

The SPEAKER. Rule XI provides that—

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely:
Subject relating— * * *
21. To the levees of the Mississippi River, to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

Mr. RANDALL. This also embraces an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and that is the reason the Chair states that there is some difficulty about where it should go. It relates to the levees of the river, and also refers to an appropriation.

Mr. BUCKNER. Let the Chair have read the new rule adopted recently in reference to Rivers and Harbors Committee and the jurisdiction of these committees.

Mr. WILLIS. The jurisdiction of the committee is plainly laid down in the rule. There can be no mistake in reference to the matter. It provides that all subjects relating to the levees of the Mississippi River shall be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. Now, the message of the President of the United States has reference specially to the improvements of the Mississippi River, a subject with which, under the rule, that committee has nothing to do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have read that portion of the rule which refers to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WILLIS. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have control of all subjects relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors in the United States. This question was sprung upon the House at the time the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created, and by a decisive vote of the House it was decided then that that committee should have control of these improvements. I do not think, therefore, that there is any room whatever for discussion. The letter of the law is plain and unequivocally to the effect that all subjects relating to the improvements of the river go to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and subjects relating to the levees of the Mississippi River must go to the Committee on the Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this subject is not properly debatable.

Mr. YOUNG. This is an important subject and should be fully considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana who made the motion to amend the reference. The Chair will repeat, however, that under the rule this question is not strictly debatable; but, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, it involves a matter of much importance, and therefore the Chair prefers to have the opinion of the House upon it. Unless, therefore, there be objection the Chair will indulge gentlemen in the discussion for a while longer.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, matters of this character have universally been referred to the Committee on the Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. That committee has no intention to antagonize or oppose the Rivers and Harbors Committee in anything that may properly belong to it. But the universal practice of this House, as its journals will show, or I may say the practice which has always prevailed since I have been here, has been to make the reference of this particular report of the commission in whom we have placed the duty of recommending a plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River to the Committee on the Levees and Improvements of that river, and I appeal now to the House simply to continue the custom in that respect. This committee was created not for mere show, but to treat upon a great practical question, and it has done so in the past with signal success.

All legislation on this subject that has passed this House has first been adopted by this committee, and any act now that tends to divest it of its rights and privileges is a blow at the improvement of the Mississippi River. As to the jurisdiction of this committee over this message and report there can be no doubt when we look at what has been done by former Congresses in that regard. A glance at the records shows in a long list, too long to be read here, the following measures, every one, more or less, carrying money appropriations, that were referred by the House to this committee, the most important of which have become laws through the instrumentality of this committee:

First session of the Forty-fifth Congress, 1877, November 21—By Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana; house resolution No. 50, authorizing and directing the President to appoint a commission to provide for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

November 5, 1877—By Mr. Hatcher; a bill to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River and promote and protect its commerce.

Second session same Congress, a bill by Mr. Robertson, of Louisiana, to improve the navigation and afford protection and security to the shipping, commerce, and alluvial lands of the Mississippi River; same session, by Mr. Bicknell, a memorial relative to the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Forty-fifth Congress, third session, December 3, 1878, Hon. R. L. GIBSON, House bill 5258, for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters.

Many of the bills mentioned having failed in the Forty-fifth Congress, those looking to the creation of a commission included were reintroduced by the authors of the same in the succeeding Congress.

In this last-named Congress, which was my first, a number of important bills were introduced and referred to this committee, among which was one by myself, also asking for the appointment of a commission to consider this great subject.

The commission was appointed. Its preliminary report was referred to this committee, and a bill thereon was reported, I think, by Mr. GIBSON, adopting the plans of the commission and calling for the sum asked for by the commission. Similar bills were presented by other members, myself included, to commence work. The session being nearly at an end, the bill reported by this committee was taken to the Committee on Commerce, which incorporated it in the river and harbor bill.

December 9, 1880, estimates from the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. February 17, 1882, partial report from the Secretary of War, were referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

In the Forty-sixth Congress, second session, a bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, completion, and preservation of certain works on the Mississippi River, appropriating $5,524,000, was introduced by Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana, and referred by Mr. RANDALL, then Speaker, to this committee.

This and other money bills, too numerous to be here mentioned, some of which were presented by me, have been referred to this committee, many of which have been reported to the House by this committee, and out of which has grown all legislation on this subject up to the present time. Notably, and I did not intend to omit it, is a bill which I see before me, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of this committee during the last Congress. This bill calls for the amount asked by the commission in full, $4,613,000, for the Mississippi from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio. In this instance the Commerce Committee again in a large measure adopted the recommendations of this committee and appropriated $4,110,000 for the above purpose.

The Speaker of the last House referred to this committee all questions of this nature, as did his predecessor [Mr. RANDALL].

When first the subject was brought before the House many plans were suggested, but none of them met the approval of this body. This committee was then created to determine the plan by which the improvement of the river was to be conducted.

This was done, I believe, by the Forty-fifth Congress in a spirit of special friendship for the improvement of that river, in order that the plan by which it was to be improved might be digested carefully by a body of men who would give it exclusive consideration. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the objection, however, that this special message from the President recommends an appropriation. I have already shown that under his repeated rulings, when Speaker of this House, bills making appropriations were referred to this committee.

During the next Congress this committee had the same jurisdiction, and the Speaker referred all matters relating to this subject to it, including the report of the commission to which this report and the accompanying message of the President is simply a supplement. The special message of the President to this House in the Forty-seventh Congress, on the 17th day of February, recommending an appropriation of one million for the continuance of these improvements, was referred to this committee. The committee is now organized and prepared to give this question its special consideration, and to bring into this House such a measure carefully prepared as will meet the exigencies of the situation.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit me to ask him a single question, which embodies the gist of this whole subject? Do you claim that committee has any right under any of the rules of this House to make an appropriation for the Mississippi River?

Mr. KING. I do; and if the House thinks proper to consider it it can become a law.

Mr. WILLIS. Ah! If the House thinks proper to consider it.

Mr. KING. It can report a bill on which the House can act.

Mr. WILLIS. In other words, the House must first give you jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. Not at all. It has a right to report a money bill; but that bill by law will go to the Calendar and there will take its turn unless by special order of the House it be considered, which can be done as readily at the instance of this committee as any other. I appeal to the precedents as well as the law in this case, and precedent in our legislation is law.

This committee, it will be seen, therefore, has the jurisdiction requisite; it can report appropriation bills, and has done so repeatedly in the past.

If the true friends of that river desire to show their earnestness in its behalf they now have an opportunity of doing so by voting to sustain this committee—a committee created by this House to specially watch over, protect, and work for the interests of that great stream and of the people who dwell upon its banks.

I do not propose to say what report the committee I represent will bring in should this message be referred to it; but I do say it will do its full duty to the subject and to the whole country.

Mr. HUNT. The rule on this subject is plain and not to be misunderstood. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] who sits on my right, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has claimed jurisdiction over a bill affecting a river, and the greatest river in the United States. And what do we see now? The President has sent a special message to the House in which he recommends as exigent (to preserve the plant and to save from destruction the works which have been erected by the commission) the instant appropriation of one million of dollars. On yesterday, by unanimous leave of the House, I introduced and had referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a resolution anticipating the action of the President, asking for the appropriation of the one million of dollars in the terms of the report of the Mississippi River Commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is the only committee authorized by the rule of the House to originate an appropriation in the premises, and the only committee which, when it reports, has the privilege of the floor; the only committee which is competent to come promptly to the front and to furnish the aid which is required; the only committee which, under the rules, can come forward and claim the suspension of the business before the House in order to bring as a question of privilege this mighty interest to the consideration of the American Congress. What friend, then, of that interest can stand up successfully and say you must consign it to a committee without privilege, without the right to originate an appropriation?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me to say——

Mr. HUNT. I decline to be interrupted. A committee, too, which has been steadily refused under the action of many Congresses the right of reporting an appropriation with the privilege of the floor.

Mr. KING. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He is making a statement which I desire to correct.

Mr. HUNT. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. KING. I only want to set the gentleman right as to the facts.

Mr. HUNT. I decline to be interrupted. I ask the House, then, whether, if the measure in view is to receive the prompt aid which the President suggests, whether the resolution which I introduced yesterday is to have the consideration which the circumstances of the case require, whether the House intends that the floods shall be turned backward and the people residing on the river protected. I ask that the President's message and accompanying papers go promptly to the only committee vested with jurisdiction in this respect, the only committee with the remedial power to come to the rescue, and the committee specially organized under the rules for that purpose.

Mr. DUNN obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. I would like to answer my friend from Louisiana. He has made some statements which I desire to correct.

Mr. DUNN. I can not yield. I rose to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I think will reconcile the difficulty and the trouble.

I understand that this message brings before the House the entire report of the commission. That report refers chiefly to appropriations to be made; but it refers also, as I understand, to other matters looking simply to legislation.

Now, my motion is that so much of that report as relates to appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which has jurisdiction to deal with the subject and the privilege of reporting for consideration; and that so much of it as relates to other parts of the improvement of the Mississippi River than appropriations be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River; so that that committee, as it has done heretofore, may mature all proper legislation for the advancement of that plan of improvement.

As a friend of the Mississippi River improvement, I am not in favor of sending that part of the report which relates to appropriations to a committee which has no privilege of reporting for consideration, and which can only defeat its own purpose to advance that great measure by taking charge of it. I think the proper reference and the proper solution of the whole matter is to divide this reference, so as to give each committee for consideration the question which properly and justly belongs to it.

I trust that there will be no antagonism between the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, both of which deal with kindred subjects and should act with harmony throughout.

Mr. WILLIS. Just one word in connection with the suggestion made by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] and in the direction which he suggests; that is, of harmonizing these two committees. I would ask in pursuance of his suggestion that so much of the President's message——

Mr. DUNN. And the accompanying report.

Mr. WILLIS. As refers to the necessity of an immediate appropriation of $1,000,000 be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but as to the remaining portion, I would ask that it lie on the table for the present until the two committees can have time carefully to examine the question.

Mr. DUNN. I think we had better dispose of it now.

Mr. WILLIS. Our committee has just been organized; we have had no regular meeting, and in order to give time if possible to harmonize, if there be any conflicting claims of jurisdiction, I suggest that that part of the report shall lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. KING. You can not lay a part on the table without carrying the whole with it.

Mr. HORR. I desire to remark that this is precisely the same contest that we had in the last two Congresses. In both of those Congresses, as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. KING] states, the report of the Mississippi River Commission was sent to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. And for this reason the Committee on Commerce, at that time having charge of appropriations, withheld the question of the amount of the appropriation for the Mississippi River until the report on the levees and improvements had been received.

Now, gentlemen will see in a moment that if you take from the Committee on Levees the jurisdiction which comes from the report of the commission having charge of this matter you will leave that committee nothing to do. The Committee on Appropriations, in reference to this matter, is simply supposed to act in the way of supplying such amount as the other committee may in its judgment recommend for the purpose.

There is no doubt about this. I fought twice on the other side, so that I know exactly how that question was decided. In both those Congresses the House insisted on sending that portion of the message, together with the report of the commission, to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. In my judgment it should go there now. I take pleasure in acknowledging that I was wrong then [laughter] and insisting that I am right now. I hope the House will still make that reference, because I think that is where it belongs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The precedents in this case are not all which should determine the matter. We have now a new committee, and its power is clearly defined in the rules. The rule states that all propositions relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River shall go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. KING. It does not state that, my friend.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I refer to the rule adopted this session.

Mr. KING. I ask that it be read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly; I want it read.

Mr. HORR. With all due deference, I think it is just the other way.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows, namely:

"In Rule X, after the words 'on commerce, to consist of fifteen members,' add 'on Rivers and Harbors, to consist of fifteen members.'"

Amend paragraph 7 of Rule XI so as to read as follows:

"To commerce, Life-Saving Service, and light-houses, other than appropriations for Life-Saving Service and light-houses, to the Committee on Commerce."

And insert next thereafter the following paragraph:

"To the improvement of rivers and harbors, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is exactly what I stated.

Mr. KING. There is no such rule in regard to the Mississippi River.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Mississippi River is the biggest river of this country. A man can not travel across this continent without striking that river. It is a comprehensive term. All matters relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That is the rule. Now, will you make an exception in reference to one river? Unless the rule makes the exception I do not think the House will do it now. To what does this report allude? You do not have legislation for levees per se.

Mr. KING. We never had.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, we have not got it now. That is all I am insisting upon. The only question now is whether questions relating to levees shall be referred to that committee. If the gentleman admits that there is no question with regard to levees, then they have nothing to do with it.

Mr. HORR. We passed a resolution amending that very clause relating to levees, and put in the word "improvements."

Mr. WILLIS. No; what we did was exactly the reverse.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] is mistaken, and the RECORD has shown it. What is this matter now submitted to the House? It is a report from the Mississippi River Commission, and the matter of levees comes in only as one of the features. Levees are not mentioned with any more prominence than mattresses or dikes. The levees are a part of the channel improvement, and are mentioned as a part of the question of the general improvement of the river.

Now, this matter should go to the committee to which the rules distinctly assign all propositions relating to the improvement of rivers. There are just those two elements in this matter; the one relating entirely to the improvement of the river and the other relating to the appropriation for that purpose. Here is a committee which has exclusive jurisdiction of all matters relating to the improvement of rivers and of all matters relating to appropriations for that purpose, and I hold that this should go to that committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am not familiar with the practice in former Congresses in regard to the power which a committee has on this floor. But from the manner of presenting this question by one of the gentlemen representing the Committee on Rivers and Harbors it would seem that that committee proposes to exercise the same power in this House that the former river and harbor concern did. It would seem that that power was potent enough to even override the President of the United States in his efforts to stop the reckless squandering of the public money under the guise of public improvement.

From that day to this, through the section of country I come from, there has been but one sentiment, and that is not confined to either party. That is, that the Mississippi River question should be considered independent, separate, and distinct from these other questions; that it should not be made the means of dragging through Congress every little petty steal and petty scheme; that that grand highway that bears upon its bosom the commerce of our many millions of people should not be dwarfed by the many little creeks and bayous and inlets which are stuck on for the purpose of dragging through some little appropriation to enable boats to float upon them.

I believe in talking plainly about these things. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have all on earth that they can do within the time that this Congress will sit to consider the legitimate appropriations for the various harbors, the various rivers, the various light-houses, and the other questions which may be presented to them. I may underrate somewhat the ability of that committee; but I have been under the impression, considering the ordinary size of the hat which a member wears, that this would be work enough for them.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, there will be no mincing this matter; that men who earnestly and honestly believe that the question of the improvement of the Mississippi River is mighty enough for the consideration of this House will not say that the committee which, in the judgment of past Congresses, was organized singly and solely to take up the work of continuing the improvement of that river and devising legislation for it in the future shall be crippled, or rather destroyed, by taking away from it the only thing that you can send to it.

If you take from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River the right to work upon this Mississippi River report, what have they to do? Practically you should disband the committee, and tell the people who are asking for the improvement of that highway, "You must take your chance with the little schemes that may go through in a general bill with regard to rivers and harbors."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. KING] has introduced this amendment to refer the President's message and the accompanying report of the Chief of Engineers to the Committee on the Improvements and Levees of the Mississippi River. It seems to me that this disposition of the message and the report would be an improper one. What have we now to refer? We have this message of the President, in which he recommends an appropriation for the Mississippi River and that this appropriation be made at the present time. With that message is a report of the engineers, giving estimates of the amount needed for the improvement of the Mississippi. Now, we have two committees of this House competing for the honor of the reception of this message and the accompanying report. What are these two committees? One is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in which committee alone is lodged, by the authority of this House, the power to originate and report an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors. The other is the Committee on the Improvement and Levees of the Mississippi River, which has no authority whatever under the rules of this House to originate or report any appropriation bill whatever. What, then, is to be gained by sending any portion of the President's message on this subject or any portion of the engineers' report on this question to the Committee on Mississippi River Levees and Improvements? What can they do with this matter after they have received it? Can they determine how much money the Mississippi River ought to receive under these estimates? My friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR] nods his head and says they can. But suppose they do, can they report to this House a bill recommending——

Mr. KING. May I answer my friend?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not at present.

Mr. KING. I say, yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Can they report to this House a bill recommending that so much money be appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. KING. I answer the question in the affirmative.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I say that my colleague is misinformed on this subject.

Mr. KING. I say I am not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If my colleague will read the rules of the House he will find that he is in error on this proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to put a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Can not this House in its wisdom clothe that committee with that power if it be deemed necessary?

Mr. BLANCHARD. This House, Mr. Speaker, can "in its wisdom" do a great many things; but this House "in its wisdom" has seen fit not to do that very thing. In the formation of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River the House did not invest it with authority either to originate or to report an appropriation bill.

Now, then, if it be true, and my friend from Michigan says that I am right in that——

Mr. HORR. Certainly you are.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And he is an authority on this point, because in the Forty-seventh Congress he served on the Committee on Commerce, which had charge of this matter. If I be right in that respect, then in the name of common sense what in the world has this Committee on Mississippi River Levees and Improvements to do with this question? If it be referred to them, they can simply take these estimates, together with the President's message, and go through them in their committee, and if they reach a decision that the Mississippi River under these estimates ought to have expended upon it a certain sum of money, can they report such a measure? I repeat they can not. What must they do then? They have to knock at the door of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ask that committee to report to this House an appropriation of a sum to be used in the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to say to the gentleman, by way of correcting his statement, that the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River has full power to report an appropriation bill, but no privilege of reporting for immediate consideration; and, therefore, its report would be futile and useless. It would simply go upon the Calendar and there would die. That is the real point in this matter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield no further, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HORR. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield for one moment to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I think there is likely to be confusion about this matter, and yet it does not seem to me there is any question here which should lead to any difficulty. Now the former Congress supposed the consumption of time in looking up the Mississippi question was so great it interfered with the other duties of the Committee on Commerce and they could not have time to give it proper study; so they appointed a committee specially to take that subject up and digest it. That committee of course had to get an appropriation through the Committee on Commerce just as other committees have to through the Appropriations Committee.

Now, I beg of my friend from Saint Louis [Mr. O'NEILL], whom I do not see in his seat, to listen for one moment, for while I think he is right in his conclusion, yet he is wrong in the route he takes to get to it. He struggles with the difficulty that every man who lives on the banks of the Mississippi has struggled with ever since I have been a member here. He gets an idea that there is no other stream in the world except the Mississippi.

By special request of my friend from Arkansas I leave him out. [Laughter.]

Now, when my friend from Saint Louis talks thus early about "little creeks" and "little streams" in this country, he is talking on a subject in reference to which he will change his mind after he has investigated it. I am sensitive about these little streams. I have had some experience in reference to them, and so far as their rights go they are as sacred to me as the rights of the Father of Waters, which the gentleman from Missouri himself represents.

Do not let us get mixed up on this question. The Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River ought to have the right to digest the plan and suggest the improvements which should be made to that river, and it is a big subject, and then the committee of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] should report the necessary appropriation, precisely as the Committee on Commerce did last year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I can yield no further to my friend from Michigan. He is speaking on the wrong side of this question. [Laughter.] I yielded to him merely to give the House some information which seemed to be called for by the remarks of my friend from Arkansas. But I did not yield to him to go on with a luminous argument, with which, by the way, he always favors the House when he speaks, in support of the proposition of my colleague from Louisiana.

Now, sir, it seems the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] was mistaken so far as the judgment and experience of my friend from Michigan go, and he served on that committee, in saying that the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River have the right to report to this House an appropriation bill. That, the gentleman from Michigan says, is not his understanding of the scope and power of that committee.

Now, then, sir, I come back to the question, which may be stated in a nutshell, that if this Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River have no authority to originate and report an appropriation bill on the subject of rivers and harbors, what, then, is the necessity of the reference of any part of this message and accompanying documents to that committee? If they be sent to that committee, after that committee shall have gone through them they will then have to find their way to the committee-room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and then when they get through the message and accompanying documents will have to be taken up again by that committee, which alone is invested, by the order of the House, with the right to originate and report an appropriation bill on the subject. But if the gentleman from Arkansas be correct in his position that that committee has the authority to report to the House an appropriation bill, still he concedes that it is not entitled to the privileges of the floor as an appropriation committee. And do you not see, Mr. Speaker, that the report of a bill coming from this Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River must take its place on the Calendar of the House to be reached in its order, and every one who has served in Congress knows the Calendar is never reached.

Therefore I appeal to the friends of the Mississippi River on the floor of this House not to do a vain, useless, and idle thing. Do not send this message or any part of it to a committee which has nothing to do, I repeat, nothing to do in this Congress, and might as well not exist at all. Send it to a committee that is charged by the authority of this House with something to do with the subject, a committee that has some duty, namely, the duty of taking into consideration the question of rivers and harbors, to examine the reports of the engineers with reference to the rivers of this country, to digest, originate, and report to the House appropriation bills for the rivers and harbors, and then when the report comes here with the accompanying bill the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, under the authority of the rules of the House, has just the same right to the floor as the Appropriation Committee and can call up the bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage before the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the fact that the President of the United States has deemed it proper to send a special message to the two Houses of Congress indicating the necessity of prompt action in making an appropriation to carry on the work of the improvement of the Mississippi River is of itself sufficient to call for serious reflection on the part of the Congress of the United States upon this subject and induce us to look carefully into the question whether the appropriation is necessary, and if necessary, to look to the means of having it promptly made.

As has been mentioned here this morning, during the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth and the subsequent Congresses much was said about the Mississippi River improvement according to the plan of the commission appointed to investigate and report upon that work and to devise a plan for carrying it on. In the getting up of that plan it was deemed proper to create a special committee on the levees of the Mississippi River. The jurisdiction of that committee was never clearly defined, but the intent of its creation was manifestly to call the attention of Congress to the subject and to mature a law for the creation of this special commission to fix the plan of the work. When that was done the business of that committee was, and ought to have been, at an end, and the committee itself should have been functus officio. Since then it has been simply in the way of appropriations for the improvement of that river, and it will stand in the way of these appropriations so long as it continues to exist as a committee of this House. If it is desired to avoid any further trouble upon this subject, I should approve myself of the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], that the subject of appropriations for that river be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because that committee has the rightful and original jurisdiction of that subject, with the same power to report a bill, if it chooses, that the Committee on Appropriations have in reporting their appropriation bills. I am not sure, however, that I am right in saying they have that power. They have the right with reference to a general bill, but I am not sure in respect to a separate bill.

But the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] was that it is necessary to take this message of the President of the United States and refer it to the Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River in order to get the appropriation for the Mississippi River made separate from the general bill for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. The gentleman has also favored the House with his luminous views upon the importance of the subject, showing how utterly unimportant all other appropriations for improvements of rivers and harbors throughout the country are, and how they sink into insignificance as compared with the Mississippi River. He also enlightened us in such an ex cathedra manner about steals, in reference to the matter generally, as would indicate that he was somewhat of an expert upon the subject. We have heard, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of that sort of thing from the press of New York, particularly from the New York Sun and others, that revile and abuse the appropriations that Congress has seen proper to make for rivers and harbors, because they wanted all of the commerce of this country to go by way of the railroads to New York city. In obedience to the dictates and demands of the powerful railroad corporations of the country, the New York press would destroy, if it were possible to do so, every hope of the improvement of the 28,000 miles of water ways of this country to prevent any rivalry between them and the railroad companies, without regard to the fact that their improvement would furnish competition to the railroads, would cheapen the cost of transportation to the people of this country of their products to the markets of the world, would remove the obstructions that hinder their transportation from many parts of the country, would cheapen insurance, and reduce the rates of freight.

All of these things stand for naught in the minds of those who seek alone to promote the selfish interests of the great trunk railroad lines, and have no broader views of statesmanship than to think that the petty policy of opening up railroad lines to New York is the only one that will give that city the commerce of the country, forgetting what a broader mind would see as to the future of that great metropolis of our country, that every additional river that is made navigable, every additional facility that is extended to the general commerce of the country, inures to the ultimate benefit of that city. It is the dog-in-the-manger policy; a policy that should find no lodgment in the minds of those who have its best interests at heart. It is a policy that I can not believe commends itself to the thoughtful minds or is approved by the merchants of that city, however much the railroads may demand it, and I do not know of anything they would not demand of the people of this country to promote their special, selfish, interests.

But if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] wants an appropriation made for the improvement of the Mississippi River, let me tell him he is asking the adoption of that plan that will certainly defeat him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to make one remark?

Mr. REAGAN. I will yield to the gentleman, not for a speech, but for a question merely.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Only one remark. I want to prevent a calamity like that which happened in the last Congress when the entire progress of the Mississippi River improvement was stopped and choked on account of the appropriation being incorporated in the river and harbor bill, as a result of which this special appropriation is asked for to-day to save these partially improved works from destruction. That is all.

Mr. REAGAN. We have had that question up several times. I know there are gentlemen interested in this subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River who think there ought to be a special appropriation bill for that interest. But an experience of eight years in regard to bills on that subject induces me to believe that whenever action is attempted in that way there will be an utter failure of any appropriation; for whenever you propose to improve the Mississippi River in a separate bill the people along the Ohio River will say it must be included also in that bill, because it is one of the great tributaries of the Mississippi. The people along the Missouri River will say it must be included because it is one of the great tributaries of the Mississippi River; and the people along the Red River, the Arkansas, the Cumberland, the Illinois—all those rivers—must have them included; and you thus make an appropriation bill including the Mississippi and all its tributaries, and when you do that you shut off from its support and sympathy the people of the Atlantic coast, the people of the lake region, the people of the Pacific coast, and the people of the Gulf coast; and the result will be that you will cease to appropriate money at all.

As an earnest friend of the Mississippi River improvement, one who has done all he could for years to get liberal appropriations for the improvement of that great water way, I submit, if you are to pass a bill through this House, it must be one which will command the support of the members generally.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DUNN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas back to a doubt he expressed, in order that he may discuss it further and satisfy the mind of the House. He expressed a doubt as to whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had the privilege to report any other bill for consideration than the river and harbor bill. The language defining the jurisdiction of that committee is this:

> And the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors—

Not the river and harbor appropriation bill merely, but "bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors"—

> as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills.

I want to see this subject dealt with practically and reasonably, and everything put in the line of proper consideration and action by the House. That is all.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if we want to do anything on this subject we had better let this message go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, whose duty it is to investigate the subject and who have the power to recommend an appropriation.

Mr. DUNN. Let me ask my friend from Texas another question: I understand that a part of the report of the commission relates to other subjects than the appropriations.

Mr. REAGAN. I have already said so.

Mr. DUNN. And therefore I think the reference ought to be divided. For instance——

Mr. REAGAN. If my friend will excuse me, I can not yield further. I have already expressed my approval of his suggestion, and it is not necessary to repeat it again. I agree with him that the portion relating to appropriations should go the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and if there be any other matter in the report of which the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River could take jurisdiction, I have no objection.

But I want to see the course adopted which will secure the necessary appropriation for the improvement of that great river, so that it may not be embarrassed by the mere antagonism between committees claiming jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. GIBSON. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is simply as to which committee under the rules of the House should have charge of the consideration of this special message. Upon that, which is purely a legal question, gentlemen have undertaken to discuss the general policy of river improvements; and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has made a very ill-natured attack upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is not necessary now to undertake to defend that committee, nor is it necessary to remind the gentleman that when we come to consider the matters before that committee perhaps we will be able to show as clean hands as he or any of the friends of his special pet subject will when they come to consider that.

The only question, as I have said, for the House to consider now is whether under the rules of the House the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall consider this message or whether the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River shall consider it. That is a question which any member of this House, by giving the slightest attention to the subject, can setttle in a moment. I do not know what the precedents have been in the House upon that subject. It may be that heretofore members who advocated the improvement of the Mississippi River have been as unmanageable and turbulent as they seem to be to-day, and it may be that for the purpose of gratifying them former Congresses may have allowed that committee to consider matters that do not belong to them.

But that decision on the part of former Congressses should not override the rules of this House in the present Congress. When we turn to the rules we see that the Committee on Levees never had charge of matters of improvement at all; that when it was created it was created under the name of Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, yet when its jurisdiction was established it was given jurisdiction only of matters affecting the levees of the river, and not the improvement of the river. At the same time the same Congress that created that committee gave to the Committee on Commerce jurisdiction of all matters relating to rivers and harbors and appropriations therefor.

The present Congress created the special Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and gave to the Committee on Levees the same jurisdiction that it had in former Congresses. To-day that Levee Committee stands without any jurisdiction under the rules of the House over the improvement of the Mississippi River. Undertaking to interpret the rules of the House, we have had a general discussion as to what ought to have been and what ought not to have been the rules.

I submit that it is not a question whether this Mississippi River ought or ought not to be improved; it is not a question whether the River and Harbor Committee will be honest or dishonest in its action. It is simply a question as to what are the rules of this House. If gentlemen who are the special friends of the Mississippi River improvement desire to change the rules let them do so by direct resolution on the subject, and not come in with a sort of attack on a committee that is simply seeking to exercise a power conferred upon it by this House.

Mr. YOUNG. I had no idea, Mr. Speaker, that so many members desired to be heard upon this question, or I should perhaps have not asked for recognition to say a few words myself, nor did I suppose that the measure, at this early day of the session, had been examined by so many gentlemen, who seem to have acquired so thorough and intimate acquaintance with it in so short a time. But, however well they may be informed upon the subject, I am apprehensive that those who advocate its reference to the River and Harbor Committee are making a grave mistake, and that if they succeed in having this done they will deal the enterprise a fatal blow.

This is a question to which I have given great attention and some investigation, not only since I have been a member of this House but for many years before. I have lived nearly all my life upon the banks of the Mississippi River, and have long ago learned to appreciate the importance of its improvement, if I have not learned the proper method of accomplishing that great result. I have watched closely the course of legislation as well as the current above the thought and sentiment in respect to it, and all of this has brought me to the conclusion that unless jurisdiction over the whole subject is given to some committee created for that special purpose little or nothing will be done in furtherance of an enterprise now conceded by all parties and all sections to be eminently national in its character.

It is a subject of sufficient magnitude and importance within itself to be made the subject of special legislation separate and distinct from all other of similar character, and this must be done before any practical result can be attained. The history of legislation on the subject for nearly fifty years past is a complete and unanswerable argument in favor of the proposition which I urge. During that period of time the importance of the enterprise, that is, of restraining the wild flood of the Mississippi River as well as improving its navigation, has been urged before both Houses of Congress, and there was, I believe, never appropriated a single dollar for the former purpose until the Forty-fourth Congress created a special committee for that particular work, and all the practical good that has ever been accomplished in that direction has been through the efforts and by the work of that committee; and I do not think anything is likely to be gained by now placing it under the jurisdiction of another committee that already has, by the rules of the House, jurisdiction over as many other interests as it will probably be able to consider with as much care as should be given to every subject of public legislation.

I warn gentlemen now who are friendly to the improvement of the Mississippi River in all its bearings that if they permit the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to obtain jurisdiction of this question in the outset, they may at once surrender all hope of having very much more done for the Mississippi River than for the most insignificant stream in the country. One of the main reasons why this great river, flowing four thousand miles through the very center of our country, has not heretofore received such appropriations as its vast interests demanded is, that it has always been handicapped by being put in a general bill along with a thousand other inferior and less important water courses, many of which can never be utilized for any beneficial public purpose. In this way it has lost the support of many leading members of Congress, who believed that the usual method of passing river and harbor bills was the outgrowth of a vicious system of legislation, and therefore voted against them and the Mississippi River as well, while if the improvement of the Mississippi River had been presented as a separate and independent measure they would most cheerfully have voted for it. Recently four of the most distinguished members of this House were candidates for the position of its presiding officer, and each one of them has always professed the warmest friendship for the improvement of the Mississippi River, but each and all of them, I believe, have felt constrained to vote against any appropriation for that purpose because it was asked for in general bills, coupling with the Mississippi River a great number of other streams for which they believed appropriations ought not to be made. In the last Congress the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made some remarks on this subject, a portion of which I ask to have read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. * * * I wish that this proposition could be separated from others in this bill, so that I might vote, as I will now vote, against striking out any part of the provision in relation to the Mississippi River, and not give a seemingly opposition vote to that project by voting against the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman, if he alludes to me, that I stand there yet.

Mr. YOUNG. I have no doubt of it. Your position is correct, as it usually is, and I hope you adhere to it. I now ask that the Clerk read what a no less distinguished gentleman said a year earlier on the same subject. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], always broad-minded and statesmanlike in his views, uttered sentiments similar to those quoted from the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and I send to the Clerk's desk an extract, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COX of New York. * * * I wished for the sake of the country, and for the sake of the Congress, so often dishonored by these methods and measures, that the interests of the Mississippi River should have their own discussion. It deserved its own vote. It commanded it, as New York does, by its conspicuous magnitude. I would be willing to vote, as a New York member, even a larger sum than that on this bill, not for the levee system, for that belongs to the States, and it has been so regarded, but for a thorough improvement of the great Mississippi River, to the end that that grand inland water way might bear the commerce of the interior to the ocean, and command honest competition in the interest of the produce and commerce East, West, North, and South.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. What has this to do with the rules of the House, as to which committee should have charge of this subject?

Mr. YOUNG. I am showing the views entertained by leading members of Congress on this subject and directing attention to the fact that they coincide with those upon which I am insisting; that I will answer the question of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] in respect to the rules of the House as applicable to the proposition I was discussing before I closed my remarks. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] whose solid judgment and excellent good sense has always commanded the respect of this House, expressed in the last Congress substantially the views contained in the speeches of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and from New York [Mr. COX], from which I have had quotations read by the Clerk, and the same opinion has been held to and expressed by many other leading members of this body. There are perhaps now on this floor thirty or forty members who will not vote for any appropriation for the Mississippi River if embodied in an ordinary river and harbor bill, but would most gladly give it their support if submitted as an independent measure. They believe, and perhaps justly, that bills formulated and passed after the usual fashion of river and harbor bills is a character of legislation that ought not to prevail, but if a great national enterprise, such as the improvement of the Mississippi River, were presented free from this objection they would not hesitate to give it a cordial and active support.

I appeal to the gentlemen from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT and Mr. BLANCHARD] who have spoken so earnestly and so forcibly in opposition to the amendment offered by their colleague [Mr. KING], to pause and consider well the probable effect that will result from the adoption of their view of the case. Judging of the matter in the light of past events, there can be but little doubt but that it will be most disastrous to the enterprise which I know they desire to be successful. It is my judgment that if the improvements of the Mississippi River go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, burdened as it will be with several hundred little streams, it will receive only that attention accorded to all the others, and in the end nothing of practical benefit will be obtained. And if an appropriation were thus asked for, would it receive the support of such gentlemen as those I have named? Would it not be better to obtain the assistance and co-operation of gentlemen like these by conforming to their views than to array them against us?

Now, in answer to the question of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], I have this to say: I have not examined the rule which the gentleman says determines the proper reference in this case as a lawyer with a view of ascertaining its exact scope or technical meaning, and I do not therefore pretend to say whether or not under this rule we can send this proposition to the one committee or the other, but I do say that it is competent for the House to decide that question, and that by a majority vote we can send it to either of these committees or to any other one that may be selected. Aside, however, from a legal construction of the rule I am quite sure that to give practical effect and operation to any measure of the sort under discussion the construction insisted upon by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] must be disregarded.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand the gentleman to proclaim that this message should be sent to a committee in violation of the rules.

Mr. YOUNG. By no means. If the rules of the House, as construed by the Speaker, provides that this part of the message of the President shall be sent to any particular committee, and it should be the judgment of the House that it should go to another, then a majority vote can give it that direction, and, rule or no rule, the House can always refer any question to whatever committee a majority deems proper and necessary.

Mr. GIBSON. But it has not done so.

Mr. YOUNG. But that is exactly what I am trying to get it to do now, and gentlemen who are opposing me will find in the end that I ought to succeed.

I may say in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] that conceding that a reference of this question to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would more certainly insure the immediate appropriation of the amount asked for, it would be better that it should be lost for the time being altogether, or thrown loose into the Mississippi River, than to give this committee permanent jurisdiction over the question involved. One million of dollars is nothing compared with the aggregate sum which will be eventually required to complete this great work, and it would be better, far better, not to obtain it at all than to obtain it under the jurisdiction of a committee that will never secure adequate legislation for the purpose to which it is to be devoted.

Not that the question would not be justly and fairly dealt with by the distinguished gentleman [Mr. WILLIS] who presides over that committee, but because the committee will have before it more business connected with other measures than it will be able to properly consider and dispose of.

Mr. HENLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENLEY. I think the House may be in need of some little information, and I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] this question: If the views advocated by the gentlemen of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are to prevail, would not such action amount to an entire divestiture of all the functions of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. YOUNG. I think so, for I know of no other subject that could be properly referred to that committee.

Mr. HENLEY. Then the question is, whether it is not advisable to declare this committee, to which I happen to belong, to be purely ornamental.

Mr. YOUNG. The committee had better be abolished unless it can obtain jurisdiction of this measure, for it will have no other question to consider, and the improvement of the Mississippi River will be practically a dead issue during this Congress.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hope that I can obtain the attention of this House for a few moments, inasmuch as my voice is not so vigorous as the voices of some other gentlemen here. I am gratified that this discussion has occurred. It shows the damnable and infernal character of the rules under which we act and by which we are governed. We have one committee privileged to report at any time—a committee called the Committee of Ways and Means, composed of the brains of this House. We have another committee known as the Committee on Appropriations, whose members might properly be designated the white-buttoned mandarins of this House. [Laughter.] The remainder of the committees are mere menials and slaves, and although they are the representatives of the sovereign people of this nation, compelled to bow on their knees and ask the Speaker of this House to recognize them.

Here we have our Democratic brethren dwelling to-day in delightful unity. It is a spectacle as sweet as the Hebrews observed when they saw the oil run down the beard of Aaron. [Laughter.] What is this controversy about? You gentlemen have constructed your committees. You have made two new committees. You have divorced them and separated them into distinct and separate bodies. And here we have the grand and magnificent spectacle of the Democrats from the South quarreling over the question to which of the two committees they have newly created and originated a bill of great and vital national importance shall be referred.

I am in favor of voting not only one million dollars to improve the streams of the South, but twenty millions, if it be necessary to accomplish the advantage of the people. We have a Treasury here to-day governed by New York influence that holds in its vaults a store of millions of dollars—ay, a hundred millions—of surplus revenue, that is kept there for the sole purpose, in my judgment, of advancing the financial interests of New York and Pennsylvania. I say that this House to-day is in the control of the South and the West, and thank God for it!

We have submitted to the domination of two States and a little section which is not as large as one county in my State long enough; and let us from the West and the South stand together, and say we will unlock the vaults of the national Treasury and use the money that is kept there in idleness to improve the great water courses of this country in order that the interests of the people may not be overborne and broken down by the railroad corporations of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE rose.

Mr. BELFORD. I have not got through. [Laughter.] I have never had heretofore a chance during the nine years I have been a member to make over a five-minute speech in this House, and as I have the floor now I wish to proceed. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that what ought to be done is to give every committee in this House the privilege of making a report at any time. And what ought to be done further is to give the right to every member on the floor to call up a measure by being recognized in the broadest sense. For what is this but the representative council of this great and mighty nation? And yet two men—and you know it—two men control this House. [Laughter.] In the first place the Speaker, who agrees or disagrees to recognize a member; and the second is the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who exercises the veto power by way of constant objection. [Laughter.] Are we here to be herded like sheep in a corral or like cattle in a field, to be governed by two men? [Laughter.] What is the Speaker? He is the organ of this House, chosen by the representatives of the people. And why did you not change your rules so that every Representative on the floor of this House could have the right at least at a convenient season to bring before this grand council of the nation important measures for its consideration, and upon which it could be called to deliberate? Is it not time to work a reform so far as this question is concerned?

For one, I am in favor of committing this subject to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River; and in reply to the argument brought forward by other gentlemen that that committee has no power to make appropriations, I say amend your rules and authorize that committee, as you authorize the white-buttoned mandarins of the Appropriations Committee, to report an appropriation bill at any time. [Laughter.]

It is a grand and magnificent stream. On its bosom can float the commerce of the continent. Let us treat it with generosity and hold its crested waves up as the great ward against the railroad monopolies of America. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word for the consideration of those gentlemen on this floor who claim to be the special friends of the Mississippi River improvement. I believe it is generally conceded that under the rules this whole subject-matter must go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but we have presented the question of policy whether the House should override its rules, and the friends of the Mississippi River improvement are divided into two classes on that question of policy; one believing in a special Mississippi River improvement bill and the other in the item of appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River going into the general river and harbor appropriation bill. If, then, we now refer this legislation to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River we bind ourselves irrevocably to the policy of a separate and distinct bill in behalf of the Mississippi River, but if the subject be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that committee under the rules will have the option either of bringing in a separate bill for the Mississippi River or of making that appropriation a part of the general omnibus bill. As to which course is most expedient I consider it to be unwise to bind ourselves at this time to any rigid policy, and therefore I am in favor of keeping the option and of the reference to the River and Harbor Committee as the wiser of the two courses.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to move the previous question, but before doing so I wish to occupy the attention of the House for two or three minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman calls the previous question I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is, that the rules provide after a member has spoken he can not speak again until those who have not spoken and who claim the floor have been heard.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman insists on the point of order, of course there is nothing left to me but to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether the gentleman from Arkansas proposes an amendment.

Mr. DUNN. I have submitted a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky and the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the Speaker please state the question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves to refer the message and documents to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] moves to amend by referring it to the Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River. The gentleman from Arkansas now submits a substitute, to refer so much of this message and the accompanying documents as relates to an appropriation for the improvement of the river to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the remainder of it to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. Upon these several motions the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has demanded the previous question. The first question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the message and accompanying report as relate to the sums of money to be appropriated for improving the Mississippi River be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that the remainder thereof be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The question was taken; the House divided, and there were—ayes 34, noes not counted.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. KING, to refer the message and documents to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 114.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 50 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 144, not voting 53; as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, with Mr. OATES.

Mr. PEELLE, of Indiana, with Mr. LE FEVRE.

Mr. CHACE with Mr. VANCE.

Mr. COBB with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DEUSTER, on this vote.

Mr. RICE with Mr. HOBLITZELL.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], to refer the message and accompanying documents to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to reconsider the vote last taken, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to make that motion, since under the rules it can not come back on a motion to reconsider.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ADAMS, of New York, until Monday next, on account of important business.

LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Census be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives the report of Joseph D. Weeks, special agent in charge of statistics of wages in manufacturing industries, on wages, necessities of life, strikes, and trade unions.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTH CAROLINA CLAIMS.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3037) to refund to the State of North Carolina certain moneys therein named; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

"LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD."

Mr. BAGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3038) making an appropriation for the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," to be erected in the harbor of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN IOWA.

Mr. McCOID. There is a bill on the House Calendar, reported today favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary, which I ask consent may be considered at this time. It is House bill No. 448, to fix the times for holding the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa shall begin and be held as follows: At Dubuque, on the first Tuesday in April and third Tuesday in November of each year; at Fort Dodge, on the third Tuesdays in January and June of each year; and at Sioux City, on the second Tuesday of May and first Tuesday in October of each year.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGET DOWD.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3039) restoring the name of Bridget Dowd to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY TARBELL.

Mr. HISCOCK also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3040) for the relief of Mary Tarbell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for immediate action the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to ascertain and report as early as practicable the number of employés of this House, the character of their employment, the number of hours they are daily engaged in the public service, and whether the convenience of the members in the discharge of their public duties requires that the number be increased or diminished.

2. They shall further report the names of said employés, and the State or States from which they were appointed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. It is only a resolution of inquiry,

Mr. YOUNG. I object. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. YOUNG. I object, unless the resolution goes to the Committee on Accounts. That is the proper reference.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call attention to the fact that the objection comes from the other side of the House. This side is in favor of reform in the civil service.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred accordingly.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House adjourn.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit a communication from the governor of the State of Illinois, with a copy of an act of the General Assembly of that State, tendering to the United States the cession of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, upon condition that it shall be enlarged and maintained as a national water way for commercial purposes.

The proposed cession is an element of the subject which Congress had under consideration in directing, by the act of August 2, 1882, a survey for a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin by the most practicable route to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, the canal to be not less than seventy feet wide at the water line, and not less than seven feet in depth of water, and with capacity for vessels of at least 280 tons burden; and also a survey of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and an estimate of the cost of enlarging it to the dimensions of the proposed canal betwen Hennepin and the Mississippi River.

The surveys ordered in the above act have been completed and the report upon them is included in the last annual report of the Secretary of War, and a copy is herewith submitted. It is estimated in the report that by the enlargement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the construction of the proposed canal by the shortest route between Hennepin and the Mississippi River a direct and convenient thoroughfare for vessels of 280 tons burden may be opened from the Mississippi River to Lake Michigan at a cost of $8,110,286.65, and that the annual charge for maintenance would be $138,600.

It appears from these papers that the estimated yield of corn, wheat, and oats for 1882 in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, and Nebraska was more than a thousand million bushels. It is claimed that if the cheap water-transportation route which is now continuous from the Atlantic Ocean to Chicago is extended to the Upper Mississippi by such a canal, a great benefit in the reduction of freight charges would result to the people of the Upper Mississippi Valley, whose productions I have only partly noted, not only upon their own shipments, but upon the articles of commerce used by them, which are now taken from the Eastern States by water only as far as Chicago.

As a matter of great interest, especially to the citizens of that part of the country, I commend the general subject to your consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 8, 1884.

Mr. MURPHY. I move that this message, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two days.

Mr. MORRISON. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. OCHILTREE].

DEATH OF HERR LASKER.

Mr. OCHILTREE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of the eminent German statesman Edward Lasker.

That his loss is not alone to be mourned by the people of his native land, where his firm and constant exposition of and devotion to free and liberal ideas have materially advanced the social, political, and economic condition of those peoples, but by the lovers of liberty throughout the world.

That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased as well as to the minister of the United States resident at the capital of the German Empire, to be by him communicated through the legitimate channel to the presiding officer of the legislative body of which he was a member.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

The motion of Mr. MORRISON was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 10, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE SCHUYLKILL ARSENAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, together with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of War, of the 7th instant, inclosing a copy of one from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, submitting plans and estimates for the construction of walls, &c., at the Schuylkill arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., rendered necessary by the opening of Peltz street, and recommending that an appropriation be made of the amount estimated to be requisite for the work referred to.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 9, 1884.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Lieut. Col. George H Elliot, Corps of Engineers, of the results of a survey of Pawtucket River, Rhode Island, made in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, inclosing a supplemental report by the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim known as the Petaca grant, No. 105; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of the 4th December, 1883, copies of leases, contracts, orders, instructions, or regulations made or issued by the Interior Department since the last session of Congress in relation to the Yellowstone Park, &c.

Mr. VEST. Let these papers lie upon the table and be printed. I will take occasion to call the matter up hereafter, as I desire to say something in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the communication and accompanying papers will be printed and laid upon the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine, at Bangor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of a number of discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of an act granting 160 acres of land to each soldier of that war. I do not know whether the petition should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands or the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is rather under the impression that the Committee on Pensions has charge of all matters relating to soldiers' pensions, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN presented the memorial of Francese L. Turnbull, of Baltimore, an owner of land in Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 559) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of William A. Albright, administrator of Jonathan Albright, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, praying compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of William R. Herron, of Charleston, S. C., praying compensation for services rendered at the custom-house in that harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of members of Gordon Tanner Post, No. 159, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the bill repealing the statute of limitation in regard to arrearages of pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of H. H. Gilley, of Flora, Ill., late private Company G, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Grand Army Post No. 92, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, praying that further rewards be granted to ex-Union soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of William M. Beasley, a citizen of Limestone County, Alabama, praying compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the memorial of W. B. Welles, of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 559) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hold in my hand a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which has been transmitted to me, and which I present to this body and desire to have read. The resolution is in relation to the question of pleuro-pneumonia. In November last a national convention of cattle-breeders was held in Chicago, Ill., to take action in regard to pleuro-pneumonia and to devise means to prevent its spread and bring the subject to the attention of the Federal Government. As a result of that meeting the governor of the State of New York in his late message recommended the Legislature to petition Congress for Federal action upon this question. In compliance with the recommendation of the governor the Legislature has passed a joint resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 8, 1884.

Whereas the subject of the existence in the United States of the contagious disease of cattle known as the lung plague, or contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and the necessity and practicability of its being suppressed, has, during several recent sessions of Congress, been presented for the consideration of both Houses without any effective action being taken, although earnest appeals have been made, not only by individual members but by legislative bodies, by agricultural associations, and by representatives of the dairy and grazing interests in many of the States; and

Whereas it has been conclusively shown by the report of the commissioners appointed under the authority of Congress to consider the matter, and known as the Treasury Cattle Commission, that the disease in question is entirely of foreign origin, that its existence in any country threatens the supply of beef and of milk to the inhabitants, that the neglect to extirpate it in time has brought great calamity in some countries, while in others, in which proper and timely measures have been taken, it has been wholly driven out and kept out, and that, under the circumstances existing, the work can be effectually accomplished in the United States only by means of an organization unlimited by State lines, and such as Congress alone can authorize and establish, which shall exist for the purpose of harmonizing and unifying the action of the several States involved, and shall for that purpose be furnished with funds from the National Treasury, to be expended for an object which is national in its character and importance: Therefore,

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Senators of this State in Congress be requested, and the Representatives of this State be requested, to use their best efforts to secure the enactment of a law to carry into effect the recommendation made by the Treasury Cattle Commission in its report transmitted to Congress in February, 1882, for the extinction of the lung plague and to provide means therefor, or to secure such other legislation as may speedily and effectually accomplish the result.

By order of the assembly.

C. A. CHICKERING, Clerk.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Agriculture; and I desire to state that an adjourned meeting of the national convention of cattle-breeders is now in session in this city, and will undoubtedly be able to agree upon some action which they will desire Congress to take, and will present their memorial to this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have received a communication, addressed to myself personally, but in the nature of a petition, from the letter-carriers of the second class in Connecticut, praying for an equalization of their pay and allowances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its being received? The Chair hears none, and it will be received and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of about 1,500 citizens of the States of Kansas and Missouri, praying that the body of land known as the Oklahoma reservation in the Indian Territory may be opened to settlement. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of William H. Ward, of Monongahela City, Pa., praying for the passage of a bill paying him for a bullet-machine furnished to the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CONGER presented a petition of members of the Grand Army of the Republic of Michigan, praying that further awards of lands be granted to ex-Union soldiers and sailors; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 3, of Colorado; the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 5, of Michigan; the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 235, of Iowa; the petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 51, of Indiana; the petition of Lander Post, Grand Army of the Republic, No. 125, of Nebraska; and the petition of Antietam Post, Grand Army of the Republic, No. 64, praying for the opening of the Sioux reservation in Dakota Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Susan Buford Edson, widow of Maj. Theodore Edson, deceased, late major of ordnance United States Army, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William McClure, of Flora, Ill., late private Company A, Third Regiment Illinois Light Artillery, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Matilda Henderson, of Quincy, Ill., mother of George C. Young, late private Company B, Sixtieth Regiment United States Colored Troops, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Derby, Ind., praying for the passage of the equalization-of-bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I present a petition of the Newark (N. J.) Board of Trade, in regard to the trade-dollar, which I should like to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the petition may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

NEWARK, N. J., January 7, 1884.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The Board of Trade of the City of Newark, N. J., respectfully petition Congress to legalize the trade-dollar or redeem the same for its face value. And your petitioners will ever pray.

JAMES W. MILLER, President.

P. J. TIMM, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to report several bills and to ask that they be printed and recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that they are original bills from the committee.

Mr. DAWES. They are original bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that they be read the first and second times or only printed?

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps it is as well that they be read the first and second times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is according to the pleasure of the committee substantially. They can be reported as regular reports and read the first and second time and recommitted, or the Senate can make an order for their being printed for the use of the committee without the bills being reported.

Mr. DAWES. I think they may simply be recommitted. The object is to get them printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that several bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs may be printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. And recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it will be necessary, the Chair thinks, for the correctness of the Journal, that the bills should be read at least the first time in the regular way, and receive their number, be entered in the Journal, and then ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. DAWES. Very well, let them be read twice.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles, and ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

A bill (S. 1004) to accept and ratify certain agreements made with the Sioux Indians, and to grant a right of way to the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway Company through the Sioux reservation in Dakota;

A bill (S. 1005) for the relief of the Nez Percé Indians, in the Territory of Idaho, and of the allied tribes residing upon the Grande Ronde Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. 1006) to provide for the payment for improvements of certain settlers on the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California;

A bill (S. 1007) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Chehalis reservation, in Washington Territory, and granting patents therefor;

A bill (S. 1008) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, for the sale of a portion of their lands in said Territory, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same;

A bill (S. 1009) to provide for the payment for improvements of certain settlers on the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California; and

A bill (S. 1010) to accept and ratify an agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and Chief Moses and other Indians of the Columbia and Colville reservations, in Washington Territory, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 196) for the relief of the devisees of the late Daniel Carroll, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. A petition of the American Institute of Homœopathy, asking for legislation granting equal privileges to the graduates of all schools of medicine in appointments to the public service, was referred to the Committee on Claims. The committee is of opinion that it ought to go to some other committee, and I am instructed by that committee to report it back and ask that the Committeee on Claims be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS. I think, with all deference to the Senator from Wisconsin, that the Committee on the Civil Service would be the proper channel that it should take.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 851) to provide for the payment of ten claims for depredations committed by the Ute Indians at the time of the massacre at the White River agency in 1879, to report it back with a recommendation that the Committee on Claims be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I will state that some bills providing for payment for Indian depredations have been referred to the Committee on Claims. When there is a fund in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Indians out of which payment for the depredations may be made those bills ought, we think, to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. If there is no such fund, and when if any payment be made it is to come out of the general fund of the United States, the Committee on Claims retain those. There is, as I understand, a fund out of which payment for these depredations may be made. The claim was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs last year and was reported favorably from that committee. The report states that there is such a fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1011) granting the right of way over the public lands in Alabama and Florida to the Alabama Diagonal Railroad Company and to grant to said company the right to purchase public lands in said States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1012) granting the right of way over the public lands in Alabama and to grant lands to said State in aid of the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1013) to pay I. C. Hamner, as administrator of George M. Hamner, deceased, the proceeds of certain cotton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1014) for the relief of the corporation of Roman Catholic clergymen of the State of Maryland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1015) for the relief of John H. Huyett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1016) to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAWYER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1017) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1018) to amend sections 3929 and 4041 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the Postmaster-General to prohibit the delivery of registered letters and the payment of money-orders and providing for the payment of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LAPHAM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1019) for the relief of Peter K. Dederick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DOLPH (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1020) to extend the provisions of the acts of Congress relating to the fees of clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the district and circuit courts to the Territory of Idaho; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1021) to authorize the reapportionment of the Territory of Idaho into council and representative districts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1022) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Idaho; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1023) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations, in Idaho, for the sale of a portion of their lands in said Territory, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1024) to authorize the State of California to select other lands in place of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections returned as mineral; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1025) for the relief of William Ervin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition and papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1026) to amend the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1027) for the relief of James H. Woodard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1028) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VOORHEES. In connection with that bill I desire to state that it is an exact copy of a bill which passed both branches of Congress in the Forty-third Congress, now nearly nine years ago. It was vetoed by the then President of the United States, General Grant, on the ground that it would take more money out of the Treasury than the public interests would warrant. I hear so much complaint now about a surplus revenue and so many statements in regard to the abundance of money in the Treasury that I venture to reintroduce the same bill and invoke the action of Congress upon it, believing as I do that no better use can be made of money than to pay honest debts with it. I hope the bill, as it passed Congress before, may attract the attention of the Military Committees of both branches again. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1029) for the relief of Jessie Benton Frémont; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1030) for the relief of John Thomas Brown, administrator of the estate of Henry S. French, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JACKSON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1031) for the relief of W. C. Marsh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1032) securing the right of a party complainant in the United States courts to file a supplemental bill in equity causes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. In the absence of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] I beg leave to introduce three several bills and a joint resolution introduced by him in the last Congress, and to have orders made in regard to the papers on file, there having been no adverse report, as I understand.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 1033) giving a military record to Alexander Francesco, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 1034) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and James Waters; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 39) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1035) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1036) to provide for the construction of the Michigan and Mississippi River Canal, and to cheapen transportation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1037) for the relief of John P. Walworth; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. VOORHEES, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Sewell Coulson et al. be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the Senate accompanying Senate bill 1684, in the Forty-seventh Congress, for the relief of Lieut. A. D. Schenck, Second Artillery, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 448) to fix the times for holding the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. VEST. My attention was called away when reports of standing committees were called for. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report may be received by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VEST. The Committee on Commerce have considered the joint resolution (S. R. 34) for the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000, in accordance with the urgent request of the Mississippi River Commission, for the preservation, repair, and construction of certain works for the improvement of said river, and authorized me to report the same favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the Secretary read the preamble to the joint resolution, and I shall then ask the Senate to consider it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution, and in connection with his request he asks that the preamble to the joint resolution be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the latest report of the Mississippi River Commission, submitted to the Secretary of War December 28, 1883, declares that "every endeavor has been made to place the work in as safe a condition as possible, but it is greatly to be feared that this can only be partially accomplished, as the funds now available (the balance of last year's appropriation) will only admit of carrying on active operations till about the middle of December, after which time all work must cease until Congress makes a further appropriation for its prosecution. The commission feel that they can not too strongly urge upon Congress the necessities of the case and need of early relief, as the flood season, with all its attendant dangers, is close at hand, and the commission before that time will have exhausted all its available funds, only reserving such amounts as are absolutely needed for the care and preservation of the extensive and costly plant belonging to the works. An appropriation of $1,000,000 made immediately could be advantageously used:" Therefore,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that he is advised by the Secretary, and now remembers it, and it appears in the Journal, that yesterday, on motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], it was ordered that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of this joint resolution No. 34, "and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries."

Mr. VEST. I was not aware of that change having been made in the reference of the joint resolution. All I can say now is that I hope the Committee on Commerce will at least be acquitted of any inattention to the interests of that great river. They have done all they could in the premises, and I leave the matter now to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels obliged, under the rules and orders of the Senate, to decline to receive the report of the joint resolution from the Committee on Commerce, because it is not now before them, having been taken from them yesterday and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries. The Chair will state, however, that he thinks under the rules any of the standing committees of the Senate may originate and report any bill on subjects over which they have general jurisdiction, as the Committee on Commerce in the case of rivers.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. VEST. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will state that I asked that the joint resolution be assigned to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries because I was informed that under the rules of the Senate that committee had special jurisdiction of the river. I hope, however, that the Committee on Commerce will originate such a bill as the Chair suggests and report it to the Senate.

Mr. VEST. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce has just informed me that he has no doubt the committee would be perfectly willing to give leave to report the joint resolution as an original measure, but I shall not take that liberty, and in order to avoid any technical objection I withdraw the joint resolution for the present.

CALENDAR OF RESOLUTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair will lay before the Senate the resolutions offered on previous days. The first on the Calendar of Resolutions is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], December 10, 1883, relative to the perpetuation of the public debt.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is the morning hour through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; but it is the duty of the Chair, when any part of the morning hour remains, to lay before the Senate resolutions on the Calendar in their order. The resolution will be reported.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that it may go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be passed over. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on the 10th of December last, entitling each Senator not the chairman of a committee to a clerk.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish that that resolution may lie over for the present. I am not quite ready to call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over if there be no objection. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted December 13, 1883, that the Senate now proceed to elect a President pro tempore.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will lie over until to-morrow. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], directing the Secretary of the Interior to suspend action in issuing certificates or patents to the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad, &c. The resolution will be reported at length.

NEW ORLEANS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

The resolution submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK January 8 was read, as follows:

Whereas it is claimed by the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company that, as the Attorney-General has decided in favor of said company as to lands claimed by them, and the Secretary of the Interior has felt constrained to act upon and accept said opinion, and that Congress has no further control or authority over said lands or the claim of said company thereto: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to suspend action in issuing certificates or patents for said lands to said corporation until Congress, at this session, shall determine the questions involved in the claims of said corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I would suggest, by way of verbal criticism of the resolution, that it is not competent for the Senate by resolution to direct any executive officer to do or to abstain from doing any act imposed upon him by law. I have no doubt it would be competent for the Senate to request him, and that any officer would respect that request. I should hope that the Senate would not commit itself to an untenable position by adopting the resolution in the language in which it now appears.

In order that the whole matter may be before the Senate, I would also further suggest that as the resolution now reads it appears to create the impression that the Secretary of the Interior has denied the power and authority of Congress to exercise any control whatever over these lands. I do not suppose that it was the design of the Senator from Nebraska to leave that impression; but as the language is ambiguous I think it should be made clear. I would therefore suggest a still further modification, which I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska will be glad to make, so that it may be apparent that this claim of want of authority on the part of Congress proceeds from the attorney of the railroad company and not from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should be most happy to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas in the last proposition, and had drawn an amendment to the "whereas" so that there could be no question about that, although when I drew it I supposed it was entirely clear that the whole of the "whereas" referred to the claim or demand on the part of the railroad company and by no means on the part of the Secretary of the Interior. I was well aware of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior did not himself entertain any such idea in regard to that matter and that he believed it was not only the right of Congress but its duty also to act upon it. Therefore I have drawn an amendment so as to make it clear in that respect.

As to the other part of the proposition, I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Interior would regard the request of the Senate as much as a demand in this matter. It will therefore answer the purpose of the resolution to insert the word "requested" instead of "directed," although I may be allowed to differ in the conclusion which my friend from Kansas has reached. I believe in a matter of this kind it would be perfectly competent for the Senate to direct, because I do not understand that the Secretary of the Interior, when acting in the discharge of his duty upon a decision of the Attorney-General, is precisely in that position which my friend from Kansas would seek to place a Department officer in the discharge of his ordinary duty.

I have felt desirous that this matter of the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad, as well as the opinion of the Attorney-General, should be halted right here and now, at the portals of the question of forfeited land grants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I suggest that the Senator from Nebraska be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Nebraska will proceed notwithstanding the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. FRYE. For how long?

Mr. INGALLS. This is merely a momentary matter. It will take but a short time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will suggest to my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that it will not take a hundredth part of the time he has occupied in the consideration of the rules. I am sure he will gratify me that much.

I found it necessary in the commencement of the investigation in regard to the forfeited land grants to bring forward this case, which was intended to be a sort of forerunner, and it was hoped would form a precedent whereby, in respect to the millions that are now in this position, character and status should be given by this decision of the Attorney-General. It was made apparent that the railroad company intended to assume the position that because the Attorney-General had decided this matter, therefore Congress was concluded from asserting the power which belonged to it; and when I used the words "felt constrained," on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, I only meant that his predecessor had chosen to call upon the Attorney-General for an opinion in regard to this specific case, and inasmuch as the Attorney-General had responded to that request and given his opinion as to the law, the Secretary of the Interior, as a matter of courtesy at least to a co-ordinate branch of the Government, felt constrained in that special case to act upon the opinion of the Attorney-General. I was rejoiced, as well as I think the Senate and the community were, to know the fact that the Secretary of the Interior refused the request of the Southern Pacific to ask the opinion of the Attorney-General upon that special and particular case; but when it was assumed by the railroad company that this matter was not only res adjudicata, but that the power was taken from the Congress of the United States, then it became necessary to make a flat denial of that position on the part of the railroad company.

I knew that next to the Constitution the highest law in this land was the demand of a railroad company, particularly a land-grant railroad company. I know that heretofore their demands in the Departments of this Government have amounted to law; and I have known, too, as I have read their briefs and the decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Supreme Court in a measure have recognized that the demand of a railroad company was next to the Constitution of the land as the highest law of the nation. It became necessary that this matter should be checked here and now; therefore it was that I desired it should be understood that there should be no certifications issued and no patents granted to this railroad company, whose only foundation for their claim is an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States.

With these few suggestions in response to my friend from Kansas I will propose what I send to the Chair as a substitute for the preamble and resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska modifies his resolution. It will be read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is claimed by the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company that inasmuch as the Attorney-General has decided in favor of said company as to lands demanded by them, and the Secretary of the Interior has felt constrained to act upon and accept said opinion, and said company also claim that Congress has no further control or authority over said lands or the demands of said company thereto: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend action in issuing certificates on patents for said lands to said corporation until Congress, at this session, shall determine the questions involved in the claims of said corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

TONNAGE DUTIES ON FOREIGN STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask consent to offer the following resolution, to be considered now:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to inform the Senate whether since January 1, 1864, duties of tonnage have been collected in any port of the United States from foreign steamships in contravention of treaty provisions or unauthorized by law; and, if so, the amount and date of such exactions and the name of the vessel or vessels on which such unauthorized duties have been imposed.

Mr. HALE. I should like to hear that again.

The resolution was read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception and present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will explain what is sought by the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am seeking to get the information at the request of parties who tell me that some injustice has been practiced in that regard. I want the Senate to be informed on the subject. It is a simple resolution of inquiry; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present reception and consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Is the word "alleged" in the resolution before the allegation as to violation of law?

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to "alleged" being in. My object is simply to acquire information. If the Senator from Maine prefers to have the word "alleged" inserted, let it go in.

Mr. HALE. I think that would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that the form of the resolution is one of inquiry, and it does not appear to the Chair that it assumes anything. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to inform the Senate whether since the 1st of January, 1864, certain duties on tonnage have been collected.

Mr. HALE. It is not declared then in the resolution that any such tonnage duties have been collected?

Mr. VOORHEES. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present reception and consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

BOUNTY TO UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate the number of soldiers in the late war for the Union who served one year, the number who served two years, the number who served three years, and the amount of bounty paid to each class respectively; also, that he inform the Senate of the amount or approximate amount of money which would be required to equalize the bounties of those who served in said war.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the report of the Committee on Rules. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in Rule XXVI to strike out the first clause in italics among the clauses at the foot of page 23 on the right-hand column. The clause proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, on the adjournment of the Senate last evening I had taken the floor to make a single observation with respect to the pending amendment. I fully agree with what was said by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and so well said, and I have also additional reasons why I shall support the amendment he has offered.

I am opposed to the creation of new committees in this body unless some absolute necessity exists for their creation. It is now proposed to take from the Committee on Commerce, not an overworked committee according to its own showing, a measure of importance, and confer that measure upon a new committee to be raised for the purpose; and that labor is taken from the Committee on Commerce, not with its own consent, not by reason of its request, but against its protest.

There are many committees in this body that have little or nothing to do. Committee-rooms are provided for them, clerks of committee. The same machinery, the same necessary expense is attendant upon a committee doing no service as is required for a committee doing a large amount of service. During three years of my service in this body I had the honor to be assigned to duty upon the Committee on Manufactures. During that period of three years we never met but once. We were hastily called together one morning by the chairman of the committee to consider a bill which by some accident had been referred to us. No sooner had the consideration commenced than a messenger from the Committee on Finance appeared at the door and demanded that the bill be sent to the Committee on Finance, it being a revenue bill and properly belonging to that committee, and his authority showed the fact that the previous day the bill had been taken from the Committee on Manufactures and assigned to the Committee on Finance by the order of the Senate. During these entire three years, with the exception of this one bill to which I have alluded, the Committee on Manufactures had no bill, no resolution, no legislative matter of any character referred to it.

It is now proposed to take from the Committee on Commerce the major part of its duties. For one I shall object to that, for I do not wish to rob the committee of a single particle of credit that belongs to it or to weaken its powers for good. They have in the past explored every part of the country from Maine to Florida searching for water. I think in one or two cases, owing to liberal appropriations, they have even caused water to run up hill. They have pushed their flatboats over all the shoals of the country, and even in streams where it was dangerous for tugs to travel they have found a chance to spend the public money. I say to the gentlemen who are to comprise the new committee that seemingly there is no glory left to them unless they have ingenuity enough to turn turnpike roads into navigable streams. Therefore it is that I do not wish to change the status and responsibilities of the Committee on Commerce; but I do wish to appeal to that committee, in whose charge I hope these matters will be left, to change the entire mode and form of the application of the public money in this regard. The money should be appropriated to great national water ways, rivers, and harbors, and we should stop making appropriations for trout streams. Do that, and your labor will be very much reduced and the appropriations will do some good.

Long before any attention of the committee will be called to the river and harbor bill, which by the custom of the Congress comes to us from the other House, I hope that committee will give some attention to reviving American commerce. I noticed in the columns of the New York Herald of yesterday a statement giving the amount of transatlantic commerce from the port of New York alone. The statement was there made that 1,196 steam vessels were engaged in conveying our products, mainly grain, to foreign ports, and not one of them floated the American flag; that there were 166 sailing vessels so engaged, and of the 166 only two floated the American flag.

Now, Mr. President, there is some good substantial reason for this. In a country like ours, furnishing more products for export than any other nation on the earth, with money going begging at 3 per cent. interest, with a people disposed to compete with the people of any other nation of the world for supremacy in all the branches of industry, there must be some good reason why the American people can not compete for the carrying of the American commerce.

I hope the Committee on Commerce will look to this. I believe I heard the Senator from Missouri, a member of the committee, state yesterday that they had in the past taken a large amount of testimony, had gathered many facts, and were prepared to give to the Senate a reason and a remedy. To my mind the reason and remedy are very plain, and at the proper time I shall endeavor to show the cause and suggest a remedy therefor. But I do hope the committee will be speedy in reporting some bill or some form of legislation to the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the debate on this very simple amendment of the Senator from Missouri has run out to every point of the compass. On the point at issue I beg to say if the Commerce Committee can discharge all the duties imposed upon it by the Senate as the rules now are, then there is no need for an additional committee. The reason, and the only reason, that can be assigned for the creation of a new committee is that the Commerce Committee has not time to supervise the river and harbor bill and the other business placed before that committee. To that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce replies—and he is indorsed in that by my colleague, a member of that committee, and by the Senator from Missouri, and by every other member of the committee who has spoken on the subject—"We have ample time to transact all the business properly and legitimately coming before the Commerce Committee from the Senate if it will get to us in time, but the reason why we have not looked more into the river and harbor bill is that it does not reach the Senate until a week or ten days previous to the close of the session." I ask if the creation of a new committee here would have any effect upon action elsewhere so as to bring the bill here sooner or later; and if it be true that the Commerce Committee can not look into that as fully as it ought to do because the bill reaches the Senate so late, then the same reason precisely would apply to any new committee created by the Senate. So the reason for the creation of the new committee on this point fails.

But I beg to say that we know it to be the fact that the House of Representatives, taking into consideration the very condition stated by the Senator from Maine, have created a river and harbor committee. If that River and Harbor Committee of the House, created with the view and design of relieving the Commerce Committee of that great burden, report that bill within a reasonable hour of the session, so that it shall come to the Senate early, the Commerce Committee of this body tell you, "We have ample time in our committee to look into that and report upon it." Therefore, so far as I can see, there is no reason whatever for the creation of a new committee.

Besides, I can say that ever since the subject of rivers and harbors has been treated by Congress the Commerce Committee has had charge of that business. The old members of the committee are experienced in it. The new members coming into that committee are taught by their predecessors in respect to it. A vast amount of valuable information is accumulated by that committee, and as the old ones go out the new ones become old, and thus is perpetuated an amount of information which is of immense value to that committee.

They tell you here in that very connection—and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce well said this river and harbor bill contains a very large number of items which have been passed upon year after year—"We have examined the investigations and reports of the Chief of Engineers on those subjects and all the testimony offered, and all we have to do now is to look into the new items." Suppose you create a new river and harbor committee, that committee must possess itself of all this information which is now possessed by the Commerce Committee; they must, in other words, begin at the very first item, old or new, and acquaint themselves with every item of that immense bill, and if the bill is detained in the other House to a late hour, then that river and harbor committee is not so well qualified to take hold of it as the Commerce Committee would be, because they have not that information which the Commerce Committee has. So much for that.

While I have the floor I will go further. In the speech made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday evening I was forcibly impressed with a part of the remarks which he made. After passing a splendid eulogy upon the navigation and commercial laws of Great Britain, and after showing how they had got possession of the carrying of 85 per cent. of our exports and about 85 per cent. of our imports, and how the flag of Great Britain floated over her commercial marine in every sea throughout the length and breadth of this earth, and that she was the great commercial mistress of the seas, he says:

Until to-day it—

That is, the merchant marine of England—carries 85 per cent. of our freight and our passengers abroad, and brings our imports home. Why?

The Senator answers "why":

Because Congress has not taken care of the interest of American shipping; because boards of trade, and trinity-houses, and marine courts, with their boards and their councils, have been at work day in and day out, in season and out of season, to help Great Britain to her position of power; and while we have sat here and seen her forcing herself onward until she controls the world, what have we done? Sat here in blind amazement, utterly paralyzed, weak as infants, and seen her strip our power from us.

And he shows in the same speech that in 1860—and I will go back behind that to 1855—the American tonnage was greater than it is in this year of our Lord 1884. I will answer the question "why," but not with the answer given by the Senator from Maine. I would say that your navigation laws, your pilotage, your requirements in regard to extra pay, are trifling as compared with the real essential reason why the commerce of this country has been swept to the rear. Let us look to the reason in its last analysis. In 1855 we had the lowest revenue tariff we had had for years. It began in 1846, and from the time that tariff began to show its fruits our carrying trade increased, and in 1855 there was more tonnage in our American marine than there is to-day; and so there was in 1860, just before it was superseded by a high protective tariff. You may give such reasons as I have heard assigned, that the character of the shipping has been changed into iron and steel vessels. That is all very true; but your navigation laws prevent us from going to the Clyde and buying our vessels there; and you heavily tax all imported materials that go into the construction of a vessel here. The true reason is that Great Britain has invited her commercial marine to carry a free load out to the commerce of the world and bring a free load back to her ports, while your laws authorize your commercial marine to carry a free load out to the commerce of the world, but everything which attempts to come in is handicapped and heavily taxed, and nothing is brought in but what is imperatively demanded by trade. Thus it is that you may take the laws of Great Britain, and you have, as the Senator says, a country which has gathered in 85 per cent. of the entire carrying trade in the commerce of this country, both outgoing and incoming.

It is no answer to say that the same goods that would be taxed if brought by an American vessel would also be taxed if brought by an English vessel. Inasmuch as the ingoing load of an English vessel enters the ports of England with few exceptions free and inasmuch as her navigation laws are most liberal and the material in her vessels not taxed, all the conditions are in favor of the English vessel; and it is true that an English vessel takes a load of English goods to Brazil, for instance, exchanging for sugar and coffee and bringing them to New York, while our protection laws prevent us sending an outgoing load of manufactured goods which can successfully compete with English goods. Protection prevents the out load of American manufactured goods. If you examine our laws and the laws of Great Britain you will find that British laws encourage foreign trade, while our laws restrict foreign trade, and when you compare the laws of our country under the revenue tariff of 1846 with the high protective laws of to-day, you find that under a low tariff our carrying trade flourished, and under the present high tariff our carrying trade is in decay; and from the adoption of your high tariff laws you may date the decadence of the American carrying trade, and it has gone on, year by year, so that in 1884 our flag has almost ceased to appear upon the high seas. From 1855 to 1860, when you had but few commercial restrictions and a tariff only sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government, then your commerce flourished. Now you have a high tariff, and your flag no longer floats over your own exports or imports. Judge ye which is best for your carrying trade.

The greatest man that New England ever produced beyond all comparison, Daniel Webster, in 1824, when he opposed with all his mighty intellect and trained powers the adoption of the protective system, did it not only on constitutional grounds yet unanswered, but upon the ground that at that time the marine business, the carrying trade of New England was over and above and beyond her interest in manufactures, and that the striking down of the carrying trade would follow as inevitably as that water flows down stream whenever you adopted a protective tariff, and that the Government had no right to discriminate in favor of one against other industries.

That protective system adopted in 1824 and made every year more and more oppressive is to-day a dark shadow over the whole land, and your carrying trade is driven from the high seas. Webster saw it, and therefore he opposed it; and I believe there were but three men in all New England who voted for the tariff bill of 1824; and afterward, when Mr. Webster changed his course on that subject, the nearest approximation he ever made to an apology for having changed was that the interests of New England had changed by reason of the tariff of 1824, and it would be unwise for him to go back to a revenue tariff. But, sir, it is just as certain as the rising of the sun that whenever you have a protective tariff our carrying trade is in the very nature of things swept from the high seas.

So much for that part of the speech of the Senator from Maine, beautiful as everything he says is.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. Why was it that the commerce of Great Britain did not suffer any deterioration from 1824 to 1846, when they maintained the doctrine of protection to its full extent?

Mr. MAXEY. I do not at this distance distinctly hear the question.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask why was it that the commerce of Great Britain did not suffer any deterioration while they maintained the doctrine of a protective tariff from 1824 to 1846 and some time after it?

Mr. MAXEY. Why, Mr. President, we had better look at the facts. The commerce of Great Britain never deteriorated, because prior to 1846 her carrying trade was not more handicapped by protection and navigation laws than ours was during the same period. Since 1846 she has adopted a wiser policy, and it has been on the up-grade. In the debate to which I have referred in 1824 Mr. Clay said, with all his magnificent power and imperious bearing, "Would any man dare to get up in the British House of Commons and advocate the repeal of the protective laws?" And Mr. Webster replied to him that already in Great Britain at that time men were taking that position; and I believe (for I am speaking entirely without notes and by memory) he referred to Lord Liverpool and the Marquis of Lansdowne, who had already taken that position, and shortly after that the fight began under Cobden for the people, and was kept up against him by the protectionists with all the power that wealth and talent could bring against the repeal he urged. It was kept up from 1824, with Sir Robert Peel himself adverse to the policy, until he was driven into it by those monster meetings of the tax-ridden people of Great Britain. He agreed to it, and the act of 1846 was passed, and from that date, while it is true that handicapped as Great Britain had been her commerce naturally increased from 1824 to 1846, yet never in the ratio that it increased from 1846 up to this present good hour, until to-day it has the carrying of about 85 per cent. of our commerce exported and imported and the most of the commerce of the world.

Mr. MORRILL. Does not the Senator from Texas know that the repeal of the corn laws was the greatest measure of protection that the manufacturers of Great Britain could receive at that time?

Mr. MAXEY. That statement is very singular. I do not know that, but I do know this, that the proposition as it originated to repeal the corn laws of Great Britain resulted in repealing all her protective laws for the protection of her manufactures as well as the protection of farm products. While the protectionists of that country at that time opposed the repeal of the corn laws, yet the corn laws were repealed. When they went down the policy broadened out and became a grander and grander proposition under the lead of Bright and Cobden, and it never stopped until protection, and all of it, was wiped out. The effect of the repeal of the corn laws was that when the wheat of our country and the beef and the pork went into Great Britain it competed there with their beef, and their wheat, and their pork, and the workman got his food cheaper by reason of the repeal of the corn laws. At the same time the tax on the various manufacturing industries was repealed also, and the result showed the fallacy of the idea that protection protects labor. In the State in which I live the laboring men, white and black, raising cotton in the field compete with the lowest-paid pauper labor on the face of God's green earth; they contend with the pauper labor of Egypt, they contend with the pauper labor of India, and yet the white men and the black men of Texas raise cotton in defiance of all this pauper labor, and ask no protection from this Government in the way of tariff. They boldly defy competition on the markets of the world, and only ask that their Government shall not by an unwise and unjust system of laws take part of the money resulting from the crop they raise and market in competition with the pauper labor of Egypt and India, and by force of law turn it over to the owner of some protected factory. England admits their corn, wheat, pork, beef, and cotton free, but if they want to buy something to bring home this Government taxes them heavily, to protect American labor against the pauper labor of Europe! Discrimination with a vengeance!

The sturdy farmers of the Western States are rising in their might and are intelligently studying this proposition. They raise wheat in competition with the pauper labor of Poland, of Austria, of Turkey, of Russia, and all the country around the Black Sea, where labor commands a mere pittance; and yet those bold, hardy, industrious men of the West demand no protection. We only hear of it in other parts; and let me say to-day the handwriting is upon the wall, the time will come, and come speedily, when you, sir [Mr. PLATT in the chair], will be opposed to protection; the time will come when the factories of your country will shift themselves and place their machinery for manufacturing down in our country side by side with the cotton, with the wool, with the hides, and with the raw produce that they manufacture, because you now not only have to transport all the raw material, but the food that feeds your hands while at work, whereas we have cattle upon a thousand hills, pork, wheat, and mutton to feed our hands down there, and we have the cotton and the wool and all the raw materials needed to manufacture. Sir, the whole theory is wrong. I refer to this only from the fact that the Senator from Maine in his beautiful discourse branched off and gave us his views as to the grounds of the decadence of our commercial marine. The reason which he assigned, in my judgment, is fallacious. The true reason is the protective laws, which prevent in the very nature of things a free commerce between us and the nations of the earth.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I concurred in a great deal that was said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday in his very animated argument in favor of the dismemberment of the business of the Committee on Commerce, but I did not concur in all that he said with respect to the Committee on Commerce, of which I do not happen to be a member. He complained of the committee especially because it had not reported and vigorously advocated the adoption of a law overriding all the statutes of the States upon the subject of compulsory pilotage, and he made some assertions in regard to that subject which were really astonishing to me. He characterized the men who receive compensation in the way of half-pilotage as pirates.

Now, sir, I dissent entirely from the view taken by the Senator from Maine on that subject. I say that if there is a class of men in the Union to-day enjoying any advantage under its legislation that is better entitled to its protection than any other that is likely to get it, it is this very class of hard-working, laborious pilots to whom the Senator has referred. Reference has been made to lobbies of pilots. I have taken little interest in this subject hitherto, but I am free to say that I never saw in or about this Capitol a single representative of a pilot. They are not the men who come to Congress in behalf of their interests. Men who earn their daily bread by incurring the perils of the sea and undergoing all the hardships of nature for the few dollars of compensation that is awarded to them under our respective State systems are not the men, let me tell the Senator, who come to Congress and besiege our bodies and surround our Capitol. They are not able to do it. I have never seen one of them here.

The Senator complains because Congress has not overridden the State system of regulating pilotage, which has been in existence, let me tell him, from the time the States of this Union had any existence. He says that Congress remitted to the States in 1789 the power to regulate pilotage——

Mr. FRYE. Seventeen hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Seventeen hundred and ninety-eight. Congress could not have remitted to the States a subject that the States had never given up jurisdiction over. The act of 1798 adopted or at least ratified all the State laws on this subject and left it entirely with the power of local regulation, because in the judgment of the wise men who adopted our commercial system or the laws giving effect to the Constitution on the subject of commerce this subject could not be well regulated except by local law; and that is the truth. There are some commercial subjects that the General Government can not well regulate, and this happens to be one of them.

The Senator complains of the great State of New York, and everything he has said may be appropriate to that, but it is entirely inapplicable to some of the States on our southern border. I say that the adoption of his views would drive out of existence that meritorious, brave, adventurous class of men known as pilots in nearly all the ports of the South, and would deprive property and life of all that security which they derive from the existence of this meritorious class. If a general law on this subject could be adopted what would be its effects? Do you think that the pilots in many of these little outlying places, where your vessels go from time to time, could exist? I say they could not; and this was not entirely an American invention; this system of half-pilotage, or at least compulsory pilotage, had been recognized by all the refined commercial states of Europe before it ever found a place in our system. France, Sweden, the Hanseatic League, all the pioneer nations in commerce, long before we had an existence recognized and gave effect to the system of compulsory pilotage, and made it obligatory on the masters of all vessels to take pilots, in order that the lives and property under their jurisdiction might be secure. Let me read what Mr. Justice Curtis said in the case of Cooley vs. The Board of Wardens of Port of Philadelphia in vindication of this class of persons and this system. This was a case which involved the constitutionality of a statute of Pennsylvania authorizing the collection of half-pilotage, the system so strongly denounced by the Senator from Maine. This is the language of Mr. Justice Curtis, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court on this question:

> We think this particular regulation concerning half-pilotage fees is an appropriate part of a general system of regulations of this subject. Testing it by the practice of commercial states and countries legislating on this subject, we find it has usually been deemed necessary to make similar provisions. Numerous laws of this kind are cited in the learned argument of the counsel for the defendant in error; and their fitness, as a part of a system of pilotage in many places, may be inferred from their existence in so many different States and countries. Like other laws, they are framed to meet the usual cases, quæ frequentius accidunt; they rest upon the propriety of securing lives and property exposed to the perils of a dangerous navigation by taking on board a person peculiarly skilled to encounter or avoid them; upon the policy of discouraging the commanders of vessels from refusing to receive such persons on board at the proper times and places; and upon the expediency, and even intrinsic justice, of not suffering those who have incurred labor and expense and danger to place themselves in a position to render important service, generally necessary, to go unrewarded because the master of a particular vessel either rashly refuses their proffered assistance, or, contrary to the general experience, does not need it. There are many cases in which an offer to perform, accompanied by present ability to perform, is deemed by law equivalent to performance. The laws of commercial states and countries have made an offer of pilotage service one of those cases; and we can not pronounce a law which does this to be so far removed from the usual and fit scope of laws for the regulation of pilots and pilotage as to be deemed, for this cause, a covert attempt to legislate upon another subject under the appearance of legislating on this one.

That is what the Supreme Court of the United States, through the mouth of one of its most eminent judges, stated in regard to this subject of pilotage. It is possible, Mr. President, that the question may come up in a different way from this, but I was unwilling to let what the Senator from Maine said in regard to this meritorious class of persons go by without a word of reply, for I think it was undeserved. I think them very far removed from the crime of piracy.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me. I had not seen the report of what I said until I found it here on my desk in the RECORD. I thought I did not say that the pilots were pirates, because it does not seem to be possible that even in the heat of speech I could use that language touching the pilots themselves. I see I alluded to the system of law as a system of piracy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am perfectly willing to accept that explanation from the Senator. I do not suppose that he meant that. Indeed, I do not suppose that he would consider for a moment that class of people as falling within the definition of pirates.

Mr. FRYE. No; I alluded to the system itself.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Well, sir, I say that this system illustrates more than anything I know of the importance of leaving such subjects to the regulation of the States. If you attempt to put through this body a uniform law on this subject, it might be wise enough when applied to New York, but it would be ruinous to half a dozen other States. Hence the framers of this commercial system of ours left the regulation of pilotage to the States, and from the time of our colonial existence to the present hour it has continued so, untouched by national authority. The case from which I read a while ago was one in which the master of a vessel appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States against a half-pilotage law enacted by the State of Pennsylvania, and claimed that that law was unconstitutional, because it infringed the power of Congress to regulate commerce. The court sustained the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania law, and Judge Curtis gave expression to the views that I read a while ago in regard to the wisdom of half-pilotage, or compulsory pilotage, as it may be more properly called. Here is a body of men educated and trained for a particular service connected with the preservation of life and property on the high seas. Suppose you do away with them in the interest of economy. See the peril that you incur; see the risks to which you expose numbers of people that have to employ ships and vessels to carry them or their property. It is because of the connection of the interest of the general public with this kind of duty that the Government has ever been called upon to interfere. I have before me a list of countries and States that I will not weary the Senate by enumerating, the most refined and enlightened in the world, that have adopted and still continue to employ this system, because it has been found by experience to be necessary to the conservation of the lives and property of the public.

We know how far human selfishness will go in matters of this kind. You can take a shipmaster, hampered and beset by a hard-hearted owner, lying off a port, with the lives of the people on board his ship, and the property too at risk, and if he is permitted to go into a harbor on his own responsibility and without the aid of a pilot, in nine cases out of ten he will take the risk rather than pay the fees, and thus imperil the lives of the people and their property for the sake of saving a few dollars. Now, I say, if there were no other interest involved in the matter but the interest of that ship and the lives of the captain and the crew, the question would be a simple one; but, sir, they are trustees for the people; they are carriers, and the government of every country has a right in its legislation to enact such laws as in its wisdom may be necessary for the protection of the lives and property of the people.

It was upon this principle that the celebrated bill of Mr. Webster known as the steamboat bill of 1852 was framed, and under that bill a class of people known as pilots are recognized, over whom the Government of the United States exercises a special supervision. A person can not be a pilot, as the Senator well knows, on any steam vessel navigating the waters of the United States without having passed an examination and having obtained a license from the public authorities of the United States. Why is this? Why this interference on the part of the Government with private employments? Why this stretching forth the hand of authority to deal with the individual concerns of men? It is not because the Government of the United States cares anything about the professional qualifications of that engineer. He may go into the interior of the country and run a saw-mill or a sugar-mill or a sugar refinery and the Government has nothing to say about him. They do not care; they leave that to the personal risk of the man who employs him, because there nothing but individual interests are involved; but when he comes to ask for the place of a pilot on a steamboat he can not get employment at the hands of an owner of a steamboat unless he has the certificate of the Government showing that he possesses the necessary qualifications for the position. Why is that? It is because the public of the United States have an interest in the subject; it is because the people at large, their lives and their property, are involved in the subject; and hence the Government steps in for the public security, and declares that no man shall be permitted to attend to the ordinary duties of an engineer on board a steamboat carrying passengers unless he has been found fit to perform those duties with safety to the general public.

So it is, Mr. President, with respect to the question of half-pilotage. The governments of the respective States with whom this subject was left at the beginning of our Government have exercised it, as I think, wisely. Massachusetts still maintains her law on that subject. New York may have found it wise to dispense with hers. Many of the States of the South have found it wise to maintain such laws, because they were of opinion there that if a different system prevailed the entire pilotage system would go by the board.

These men, sir, are hard working men; they are men that incur more peril in the discharge of their duties toward the public than any other class, and they are about the only class of hard laborers that the bounty of this Government in any way has ever been extended to or that have had any recognition under our laws, and that only for the reason given, that they occupied a relation to the public that no other class of laborers occupies.

This much, Mr. President, I have thought it proper to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to strike out from Rule XXVI the clause which has been reported.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I shall vote with the Committee on Commerce to retain the jurisdiction they now have, because they avow that they are able to perform the work, and I believe they are. We have given them relief twice in the last few years, first by the appointment of a committee on the improvement of the Mississippi River, composed of seven Senators, which must certainly be a very great aid to the Committee on Commerce in furnishing information as to the needs of that inland sea; we gave them another committee, known as the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, consisting of seven Senators, which is certainly able to take from them a good deal of the labor they might otherwise have to perform. I was a member of that committee for a while. We took charge of all the work relative to the improvement of the Mississippi delta by the Eads jetties, and relieved the Committee on Commerce of a great deal of work; and while the Transportation Committee has not had one-tenth part of the work it can do assigned to it, it is willing and able to give very great relief to the Committee on Commerce.

These two committees, it seems to me, render another committee on internal improvements, to consist of nine Senators, in the face of the objection made by the Committee on Commerce, entirely unnecessary now. It may be necessary at a short session, but during this long session there can not be any trouble about the performance of any reasonable amount of work by the Commerce Committee.

I am glad, and I may as well say so now while I am up, that the question as to the duties of the committee has taken a wide range in the discussion, and I am glad the Senator from Maine saw fit to take the initiative. It only shows how sensitive the representatives of the people are in regard to the great commercial relations of this country. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] on yesterday very properly and very earnestly called the attention of the Committee on Commerce to many important matters relating to our merchant marine. Everybody agrees that it is in a frightful condition, and that something has to be done. Doubtless there are wide differences of opinion as to the proper remedy for the acknowledged evil.

There were submitted last year, and there have been submitted to us again, a number of bills which may prove valuable in some regards; but they are mere patches, plasters, soothing-sirups; they utterly fail to reach the root of the evil; they all look in the right direction, however, and I expect to give them my support. There never will be any substantial restoration of our commercial marine, in my judgment, as long as our laws prohibit our people from buying ships where they see fit, upon the best terms they can, and have them registered and protected, as all their competitors do. They are now prohibited from purchasing ships abroad on any terms by our navigation laws. That right conceded will not, I admit, alone accomplish the purpose, but it is an indispensable preliminary step. We have laws on the statute-books based upon treaties of which I desire to present a specimen, and to call the attention of the Committee on Commerce specially to it, because I have a bill on the subject pending before them. One law or treaty illustrates all, as nearly every other nation has the same right as "the most favored nation" by our treaties. Section 4229 of the Revised Statutes provides:

No other or higher rate of duties shall be imposed or collected on vessels of Prussia, or of her dominions, from whencesoever coming, nor on their cargoes, howsoever composed, than are or may be payable on vessels of the United States and their cargoes.

What is the meaning and effect of that? Plainly that we can give our people no privileges in our foreign carrying trade that we are not compelled to give to the people of Prussia. Their vessels shall be taxed no more, their cargoes shall be taxed no more, than ours. No discriminating tariff can be imposed to favor American shipping; nothing can be done that every other foreign nation does not get the equal benefit of by treaty, because, I repeat, England, France, Norway, Sweden, Mexico, all nations perhaps except Spain, have the privileges of "the most favored nation." I have for years pressed upon the Congress of the United States, in view of existing treaties, the fact that we are only handicapping our own people by maintaining our present navigation laws, prohibiting them from buying ships where all their competitors buy theirs and upon the same terms, and that so long as these treaties exist we are obviously transferring into the hands of foreigners a monopoly of our carrying trade to the absolute exclusion of our own people.

Two years ago I made a speech on this floor, which attracted the attention of the country, in favor of allowing our people, under the circumstances, to buy their ships abroad if they desired to. I have again introduced a bill for that purpose and have referred it to the Committee on Commerce. I have handed a brief to the chairman of that committee, whom I see before me, elaborating my views as to the reasons why that bill ought to pass. I do not care to take the time of the committee by appearing before it to make a verbal argument. If they think anything I have written of sufficient value to print it for the use of the committee, I should be glad other Senators may thus see it. The main point is that now under our treaties and laws Prussia, England, France, all the other nations of the world except our own citizens, have a right to buy the ships they use in our carrying trade wherever they see fit, in the cheapest market, and they do it. Even Mexico, I see, in view perhaps of more extended relations between her and this country, is buying now a highly respectable commercial marine at low prices, whereby she can carry all the exports and imports between the ports of New Orleans and Galveston and the ports of Mexico and between our ports and the West India ports; and our people, no matter how anxious they may be to do it, are prohibited by our laws from competing with any foreign nation for it, unless we build ships at home and pay any price our ship-builders see fit to ask. The difference in the cost of ships in the sharp competition for freights may make a difference amounting to a profit or loss in the trade.

The foreign nations who do our hauling now buy no ships from us; they encourage no ship-building industry here. Our carrying trade goes on and it goes on in foreign bottoms and under foreign flags, and will continue to do so even if we refuse to give our people the right to buy ships. All I am demanding from Congress is that we shall not by law prohibit our people from entering on the ocean highways of the world's commerce, especially in doing their own work; in short, that our own people shall be allowed to trade by law upon the same terms that by treaty we allow foreigners to do.

That is all there is of my free-ship proposition. You may remove compulsory pilotage, take off taxes, do what you please with the view of aiding commerce, for all of which I will vote and vote cheerfully; but until you give our people the right to buy ships as cheap as other people competing with them have a right by law to buy them, our carrying trade will diminish day by day.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] very well remarked that of over a thousand steamships crossing the Atlantic Ocean from New York, carrying our exports and bringing back our imports, not one carries the American flag. What have we left? We have fallen from 80 to 16 per cent. even of our own trade and have abandoned the trade of the world to other nations. That remnant of 16 per cent. is carried in miserable, old, worn-out wooden ships; and of the sailors who man them 95 per cent., according to the report of the Register of the Treasury, are foreigners, and the most worthless class of foreigners, foreigners of such a low grade that even the great foreign steamship lines will not employ them on board their valuable vessels.

That is all America has now left of the 90,000 sailors she had twenty years ago—90,000 sailors superior in the aggregate to the best seamen of England, as was proved in many a hard-fought battle with great odds against them; for the merchant marine was always the source of supply for our Navy. Think of it. Ninety thousand sailors gone, the only men we shall ever be required to call upon to defend us in case of strife with foreign nations, because the world in arms will never attack us on our own soil; our seaboard cities to-day are lying at the mercy of any third-rate power. Our commerce, our carrying trade, is in a worse condition than that. About 90 per cent. of our exports are agricultural products, and all the cost of commissions, interest, insurance, and transportation by ocean goes into the hands of foreign nations; that is deducted from the price abroad, and the man who produces the article only gets what remains after taking off all these things and a reasonable profit from the market price where it is sold. If the nations to whom we have surrendered by treaty our carrying trade, and who alone own ships, should go to war with each other, and the cruisers of each should sink the vessels of their enemy, our goods would go to the bottom, and we have no remedy, because we have to rely upon the ships of the belligerents to carry our products. The first step to get out of these obvious difficulties is to let our people buy ships where they please. We pay one hundred and fifty millions a year now, and nearly one hundred millions of it to England, to do our carrying and passenger trade. No ships are now being built here for that work; foreign ships do it all, and they are increasing, as the movement of Mexico shows. We can be no worse off if our people buy ships abroad. They will not do it if it is not profitable. The balance of trade that you boast of so much is only about one hundred millions. We are paying one hundred and fifty millions a year to foreign nations to haul our goods to market and home; fifty millions more than all the annual balance of trade of which we hear so much. That immense sum goes to strengthen foreign nations and to exhaust us year by year. With that one hundred and fifty millions we could buy a merchant marine equal to any other nation except England, and we should have all the repairing of these ships to do at home; we should build up a class of American sailors under American commanders who could be transferred in case of war from the merchant marine to the Navy of the United States; the best defenders and the only defenders we shall ever need. And why should we not have them?

Gentlemen say you will get nothing in the way of ship-building if you allow our people to buy ships abroad. I answer, you get nothing now. You give foreign nations the right to do your carrying trade in foreign-built ships that cost about two-thirds of what is asked for ships here, and what is your remedy? Subsidies raised by taxation at home to equalize the cost of ships; tax the people at home more heavily, take more of their hard earnings than you are taxing them now to give to the men who build ships! Mr. President, all the subsidy schemes we have ever tried have proved failures. We tried it with the Garrison line; we tried it with the Roach line to Brazil, and it failed; we tried it with the steamship company across the Pacific Ocean, and they have become synonyms for fraud and corruption. Nothing that does not inhere to the business itself ever helps any business. So long as even countries as weak as Mexico can buy ships and build up a merchant marine to do our work and her own, why should we by law exclude our own people from the business? That is the question that I propose to insist upon an answer to from the Senate and from the Committee on Commerce. I have begged them in the brief I have submitted to them to make a report. If they do not approve the proposition I submitted to them, let them disapprove of it and so report; do not keep it in committee, but give it to us and give us their reasons for their refusal to report favorably, and let the Senate have a chance at it.

I agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] in what he said, but I do not care to go into that now. You have prohibited ships from being purchased abroad, and you have taxed everything that goes into the making of a ship here to such an extent that they can not be built to compete with other people on the great highway of the ocean. You can not protect anything beyond our own border, but worse than that, you have prohibited trade by a high protective tariff. As long as that remains you never can trade upon equal terms with other peoples. As the Senator from Texas said, England never sprang to her feet until she repealed all her old navigation laws and told her merchants and mechanics to pull off their coats and compete with the world.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does the Senator think that the navigation laws have been the chief cause of the decline of American commerce? If that be his view, how was it that when we had 90,000 sailors and a commercial marine next to that of Great Britain, those laws were in operation but we did not have a high tariff?

Mr. BECK. That is just one of the things I have been speaking of. I want free ships, but we must also reduce our tariff. We are handicapped to-day because we can not trade as freely as other people. You may launch a ship to-day; you may start it from New York or Philadelphia or Baltimore or any other port side by side with an English ship, and it may cost no more than the English ship; it may have exactly the same cargo as the English ship, and that cargo may cost no more. You may sail to Brazil, Chili, Peru, any of the South American countries; they may sail side by side into any foreign port, and when they get there the American is handicapped. Why? Because those people have no money, and money does not furnish a return cargo if they had. They have copper; they have ores of all sorts; they have everything that we want.

The Englishman takes all these things; he gives them cotton or other goods and takes their copper; he takes their ore; he takes their hides; he takes everything they have got in exchange; and he sails back, having swapped what he had for what they had and secured a profit in the trade, and he lands it in England and sells it. The men in England pull off their coats, work that into some new material and ship it again, perhaps increased in value tenfold. Our ship lies there; she can not take what these people have, because she has to pay 50 per cent.

before she can land it at home. Thus we are handicapped even after you have given our people the advantage of free ships. But when you make ships that now cost here, say, $300,000 work against foreign ships costing $200,000 the burden is greatly increased. When our ship costs only $200,000, or no more than theirs, you have taken a great stride in the right direction; at least you have removed the stigma now on our legislation of having by treaty surrendered to foreigners the right to monopolize our own trade. I desire to see that unjust and unnatural discrimination against our own people abolished.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I concur generally with the Senator from Kentucky on this subject, but what I was going to say was this: It would not be fair to attribute the decline of our commercial marine to the existence of the navigation laws, for those navigation laws have been in existence from the foundation of the Government and without any change.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to answer that, as I think I can. When this Government was founded, when our people ceased to be colonies and became free and independent States, they found a system all over the world of each nation assuming that every other nation was its natural enemy, and that commerce, except on the most exclusive terms, was fatal to its existence. No country pursued that policy more strenuously or maintained it more earnestly than England, and as long as she maintained a restrictive policy we antagonized it by making the same kind of restrictions, in order to meet those restrictions of hers—just as I see some gentleman now is proposing to inquire if our pork and our beef and our other things are cut off from other nations whether we can not retaliate. But England saw that nations in a commercial point of view were not enemies, they were friends, and when they made anything cheaply at home and sent it to other people who could not make it, and obtained from them what was wanted cheaper than England could produce it, it was better to make it cheap and sell it to the people that raised other things cheap than it was to hold them at arm's-length or make war on them. I put this question, in substance, once to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], in arguing this very matter. He lives in Vermont, where they raise the best potatoes in the world; Cuba raises the best oranges——

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, Florida.

Mr. BECK. Well, as good as any in the world, as good as those in Florida. Would it not be supreme folly, in order to obtain oranges in Vermont because we hated Cuba, to put a tax on all the people to build greenhouses in Vermont and raise oranges under glass that would cost 10 cents apiece that could be bought in Cuba for 1? I assume they could be raised under a protective system. Is it not better that the man in Vermont should raise his potatoes, put them on board ship, take them to Cuba, where they want them and are willing to pay a good price for them, twice what he can get at home, get oranges in Cuba and bring them to Vermont and sell them at a cent apiece, instead of requiring the people of Vermont to pay 10 cents, and have the profit of hauling both ways? England saw that and acted on it. We ought to have followed her example long ago as far as we could consistent with our other obligations.

Speaking about English commerce, as the Senator from Texas well said, from 1846 on it sprang upon its feet; her commerce doubled up and doubled up until it is now half of all the commerce of the world, and she holds over 60 per cent. of the best and most profitable of ours. Instead of being second to her and ahead of all the nations of the world put together, as we were in 1860, we have gone down and down and down, under the combined influence of restrictive laws and protective tariffs, until we are below Spain, Norway, Sweden, and I believe even Mexico.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator will pardon me. The point is if this decline is not to be attributed more to the protective system than to the navigation laws.

Mr. BECK. The two work together; but the Senate can only act on the navigation laws. The House must originate bills looking to relief from taxation. Still, discussion of these questions is profitable.

The hitherto irresistible combinations of Treasury raiders may as well learn and appreciate the fact now as hereafter that the people fully understand that a high protective tariff and a prosperous merchant marine are absolutely incompatible. One or the other must go to the wall. The people may not yet be able to realize the fact that when they pay $6 for a coat or a pair of blankets out of their hard-earned wages (which do not average a dollar a day) which laborers in other countries can buy for $3, that half of their week's wages are taken from them by law, not to support the Government, but as a subsidy to some pet of Congress who pretends that the bounty thus given is expended by him in paying higher wages to his operatives than are paid in other countries, when in fact he would discharge the last one of them if he could buy a machine to do their work, no matter in what country it was invented or manufactured or could import cheaper labor than theirs from any part of the habitable globe. They are beginning to see through the false pretenses of the interested pensioners on the labor of the people and the fallacies of their subsidized press. They see that the English laborer gets more than nine pounds of sugar for the same money they pay for six and other things in still larger proportion; and they are inquiring why these conditions exist. They are looking into the purchasing power of their wages, and why they are so often and so long idle from closed factories glutted with overproduction. They see the markets of the great outside world abandoned by American protected manufacturers, and 90 per cent. of our exports furnished by the heavily taxed and absolutely unprotected farmer and his laborers; and they see that foreign nations are our ocean carriers, factors, brokers, commission merchants, and insurers; in short, they get all the benefits and profits of our trade with the world, charge what they please, and deduct all the costs and profits from the place of production to the place of sale out of the price they pay the original producer. These are facts that can neither be denied nor concealed, and I am glad to see that they are at last assuming the prominence before Congress that their importance demands.

What I seek to do is not to break down any interest, but to open the ports of the world to our people with every facility granted and every obstacle removed. I would bring down tariff taxation to a revenue basis, and send our manufactures abroad as extensively as possible. I would give our laborers in factories employment from New Year's day to the 31st of December by supplying the world, instead of, as now, closing the factories half the year because of overproduction in a high-priced limited market.

We can feed our people cheaper than any other nation. The great internal commerce of this country, which is free under the Constitution, gives us a market that secures us immense advantages over everybody else. All these things, it seems to me, the people of this country will understand after a while.

But I rose mainly to indorse the views of the Committee on Commerce, believing that they can do this work, and as they want to do it there is no use in subdividing it. They have, as I said, the assistance of two other committees made in the last few years, the Mississippi River Committee and the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. Next I am anxious to impress upon them what I believe they all feel and think and what this discussion inaugurated by the Senator from Maine will tend to intensify, that something has to be done or what little of our commercial marine is left will go; as I said, the 16 per cent. that we have left is in such a miserable condition, manned so exclusively by the most worthless, discarded seaman of other countries, that it is almost valueless.

The object for which the navigation laws were passed originally has passed away, and no longer affords any excuse for saying to our people, "You shall not, even if you want to, carry your own goods to foreign markets in ships as cheaply as by our treaties we allow foreigners to do."

Take a man like Mr. Dalrymple, with a great farm in Dakota, where he raises two or three ship-loads of wheat. He may want to carry his wheat to London or any other foreign market—it has to be exported somewhere—and he asks leave to buy a ship abroad. The American Congress says no; we have by treaty given to Prussia and other people the right to buy their ships where they please and haul your grain; you shall not buy your ships where they buy theirs; you shall not compete with them; they may charge you what they please and make any combination they please to put up freights; your wheat may rot on the dock at New York, or Baltimore, or wherever you choose to send it, unless you buy ships here at any price home ship-builders ask. Ought that to be? We can not compel foreign nations to buy their ships from us. The moment we allow our own people to buy ships anywhere we start ship-yards here, if for nothing else for the purpose of repairs. These repairs will build up ship-building yards. They did so in Prussia, they did so in France, and they will do so everywhere. Men will repair their own property where it is done under their eye; and if we repair, we will soon build; but until we give our merchants some chance to have a part of our own trade they can do nothing, because we have given a monopoly of it, or exclusive privileges in it, to foreign countries.

These are some of the views I have presented to the Committee on Commerce. I know they will listen to them. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] showed in the very able minority report he made last year that he is thoroughly impressed with the importance of these questions, and I know he will impress his views on others of the committee. I could not forego, after the Senator from Maine had opened the question, saying what I have on this matter. He is responsible for the wide range the debate has taken.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am rather surprised that the Senator from Kentucky should see fit to bring in the question of the tariff upon this simple question of dividing the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maine might as well be alluded to.

Mr. FRYE. I did not say anything about the tariff.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not see how it has any relevancy at all, and the idea promulgated by the Senator from Kentucky that a coat can be bought in any country of the world for $3 is utterly preposterous; or if it is not preposterous, the only country in the world where it can be bought for any such sum is China, where it is made of cotton and stuffed with cotton.

Mr. President, the question of our commerce is a grave one. I am quite ready to do all in my power to improve its present condition, but it will be utterly impossible to restore the commerce of this country to the position that it occupied in ancient years. In the first place, the construction of large steamer vessels taking our Atlantic trade abroad has used up all of the smaller sailing vessels, and our clipper ships that formerly controlled the entire trade with the Indies are now obsolete and are no longer used. In our inland trade, instead of using our coasters that we formerly had, it is now all done by railroad and must continue to be so done. These two things have absorbed the large amount of profit that formerly appeared on our list of tonnage. One of the present iron steamships supplies the place of twenty or thirty small sailing vessels, and let me say now that these vessels, which have been built by foreign nations in England and in Germany are not at the present time paying institutions; many of them, I am told, are not earning 2 per cent. upon their capital; many of them are merely earning their actual expenses.

The truth is that the universal Yankee nation will employ its labor and its capital where it can make the most money. If it can make more at some other avocation than it can in commerce, it will enter upon that.

But, Mr. President, it does seem to me that this lugging in of the tariff question upon all subjects is a little aside of the duty of Senators. In relation to our trade, does it make the least difference with the carrying trade whether duties are imposed or not? Of course it makes no difference with what we buy to bring into the country, and therefore it seems to me that this is entirely beside the question.

But, Mr. President, I did not propose to embark in this discussion. I have rather leaned to the idea that our committees were sufficiently numerous without any enlargement of them. I do not know but what, in the practical operation of the question in relation to river and harbor improvements and of the general questions in relation to commerce, it might be well enough to separate the river and harbor bill from the other questions, but I do not feel any very strong interest about it. I should like, of course, to have the business of the Senate conducted in a way that will improve our foreign commerce and also to give a reasonable and proper amount for the improvement of our harbors and rivers.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] talk free trade always, and I was delighted to hear the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I should like to have a general expression from the Democratic side in favor of free trade. There has been a great deal of uncertainty within the last six months as to what course the Democratic party would take on the question of protection or free trade; it has been seriously discussed in all the press; and I am delighted to see Senators coming to the assistance of the public and solving this important question, and thus locating the Democratic party in favor of free trade just as rapidly as it is possible to get to it. Of course I hold views diametrically opposed to the Senator from Kentucky as he announced his. I have reasons, too, for the faith that is in me, and the temptation to reply to the speech which he has made is very serious indeed with me; but I remember that I have these rules in my charge. They have occupied a long while. I am exceedingly desirous to close up the consideration of these rules to-day. Therefore I forego the temptation to reply to the Senator from Kentucky, and ask the Senate that I may now have a vote on this question.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] had yesterday about this time or a little earlier concluded that he would waive the opportunity for expressing some very decided views that he has on commerce and navigation he might probably have reached the solution of this important question before this time, and he would have saved me the necessity of following in that channel of debate and of meeting that method of debate which appears to be adopted by all men who prefer denunciation to argument, of branding the opponents of his views with certain characteristic names and epithets which the Senator evidently supposes carry great meaning to the country.

He has now said that the Democratic party is committing itself to free-trade and describes us as free-traders. Sir, I assume to state that there is not a leading man in the Democratic party who has, so far at least, in either House of Congress given expression to the idea that he is, under our Constitution and under our system of laws, a free-trader in the sense that the Senator from Maine would have the country believe that we are free-traders. We are in favor of a modification of existing tariff laws for the purpose of reducing a redundant revenue of more than $100,000,000 a year, placed upon us by a war system of taxation and by unjust discriminations also, for which the Republican party is alone responsible to the people. And the resistance that is made to our views is and has been made to keep this redundant $100,000,000 a year, taxed out of the people for the purpose of improving the condition and prosperity of a certain set of monopolists who are favored with exclusive privileges under the laws of the land. Because we resist this unjust and continued taxation, because we claim some relief, some amelioration of the burdens of the people, although we admit that a tariff is a proper and constitutional manner in which to raise the largest proportion of our revenue, we are assailed here by epithets; we are called free-traders; we are persistently misrepresented by Senators on this floor.

The Senator from Kentucky was drawn into so much of the argument as he made upon the tariff by the strict analogy which holds, as everybody understands, between a law which prohibits the American people from buying ships abroad and putting them under American register and those features of the tariff law which prohibit the importation of goods to this country for sale to our people. Your tariff law contains a large number of prohibitory features which absolutely prevent the people of the United States from going abroad to purchase commodities which they desire and ought to have the opportunity to purchase cheaply and use freely. Your navigation laws do precisely the same, in putting as a penalty upon you if you do it that you shall not have an American register or the protection of the American flag for your ships if you buy them in other countries.

We are prohibited to buy ships in other countries in order that American ship-builders may have the monopoly of the home market for vessels, and we are prohibited in fact, though not in appearance, from buying many articles of merchandise for precisely the same reasons by our existing tariff laws.

I therefore think that there was a good deal of analogy between the position the Senator from Kentucky set out with and which the Senator from Maine introduced into this debate in respect to our navigation laws and those to which the Senator adverted in respect to our tariff laws. They are all made out of the same piece of cloth, they are all prohibitory tariffs, they all act upon the same idea of giving to the manufacturers, whether of ships or of goods, in this country an absolute monopoly of the home market for the sale of their goods.

These propositions are very simple; they can not be put under such a cloud as that the simplest mind in all this land shall not understand them. The burdens of them are felt in every direction. After a while other industries besides the building of ships to be sent out under the American flag will receive through this unwise and unjust legislation the same destructive visitation that the American ship-building industry has received from the prohibitory navigation laws that have so long stood upon our statute-book.

This argument is said by the Senator from Vermont to be entirely irrelevant. It is very true that it is an irrelevant argument, but for that very reason it ought to be made. We are allowed no other opportunity to make it. We are now considering the question of the power of committees of this body. A proposition is made by one of these committees to take from the Committee on Commerce so much of its power as relates to this very important subject of appropriating the people's money for the improvement of the rivers and harbors. I have been here now about six years waiting not for the purpose of speaking upon these questions, but waiting for an opportunity to vote the sentiments of my people and my own opinions upon them. I have seen the Committee on Commerce largely composed of the very elements that now constitute it, with bills sent before them from session to session of Congress now for six years, and I never have had presented to me fairly and squarely the question upon which I have so much desired to vote, whether I would consent to repeal or essentially modify the navigation laws of the United States.

This want of enterprise on the part of the Senate has not resulted from the fact that Senators have not offered bills and resolutions presenting questions of this kind, for Senators from various parts of the country and on both sides of this Chamber have introduced bills for the purpose of remodeling our navigation laws, and some for the purpose of repealing them out and out, many for the purpose of modifying them. The Committee on Commerce, composed, as I am willing freely to grant, of some of the most experienced and able gentlemen in this body, have habitually ignored these bills; and when we find Senators of other committees struggling for the floor and pressing for opportunity to bring measures of their respective committees to the consideration of the Senate, nobody ever finds the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, or any other member of that great committee, struggling for the floor or otherwise making an effort to bring before the country for its consideration the question of the navigation laws. Why is that the case?

Mr. VEST. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I suppose he does not want to make a statement which is without foundation as to the Committee on Commerce; but I call to the recollection of the Senator the fact that I reported here at the last session a bill, which I again offered on the first day of this session, to remove the evil alluded to in regard to the decline of American ship-building, and I stood here for three days and begged and pleaded and urged the Senate, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, to take up that bill and consider it. The tariff bill pushed it out, and I was finally informed that there was no time to take it up. These are the facts and I assert them, and every gentleman in this Chamber knows that they are the truth.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I shall modify the statement by saying that I waited five years instead of six, and it was only when the honorable Senator who lives upon the banks of the Missouri River, away in the very heart of our country, was put upon that committee that we found any person who took sufficient interest in this question to press a bill upon the consideration of this body; and that bill did not contain any proposition to repeal the navigation laws, as I understand, but only to modify the various little things to which the Senator from Kentucky has alluded, and the removal of which it was supposed would give the people a little more breath. There has been no energetic effort made to drive to the root of this question. No committee of this body has been bold enough to bring to the consideration of the Senate and the people that great question which is debated everywhere and considered everywhere but here, the repeal of those odious navigation laws. No, sir; our Senators on the Democratic and on the Republican side have both seemed to be afraid to tackle this question. It appears now we have got into that condition that the people have to get up a general muster and beat the long-roll before they can put us in motion to do anything they want to have done.

This tardiness, this reluctance, this inattention, this negligence on the part of a great leading committee of this body for five years, to say the least of it, would be a good excuse for the Senate to take from them that other matter upon which they seem to be concentrating all their energies, the question as to what rivers and creeks and branches and the like $20,000,000 of money of the people, taxed out of them year by year, shall be spent in so-called works of internal improvement.

Who, sir, in appointing a member upon the Committee on Commerce has any reference to any other question than how he will vote upon matters affecting the river and harbor bill? Who wants to go on that committee for any other purpose than to aid his section, his State, or his district, or his particular locality, or the river that he lives upon in the disbursement of money for the improvement of rivers and harbors? Why, sir, if we should change the title of the Committee on Commerce and strike it out entirely as the Committee on Commerce and call it "a committee on the internal improvements bill, with facilities for considering commerce as a sort of æolian attachment to that bill," we should have something that somewhat resembled the actual description of the committee that they themselves have written upon the history of the country, both as to their functions and as to their disposition to exercise its powers.

I respect the membership of that committee as much as I do any set of gentlemen in this body, and with the very best of reasons. Everybody respects them, and it is not their fault alone that the Senate of the United States has come to consider its Committee on Commerce as a mere committee for the distribution of $20,000,000 a year upon works of internal improvement by what is called the river and harbor bill. It is not their fault alone that they have abdicated the great powers of the Committee on Commerce intended for the relief of the people virtually in favor of this power of spending or distributing this modicum of money taxed out of the people to aid in local and minor public works. I believe it is the fault of the general legislative feeling or sentiment that we are here, as it seems, more for the purpose of finding out how to spend this $100,000,000 of surplus a year than we are for any other purpose whatsoever. We seem to feel that our people have got so rich that they can furnish us $100,000,000 a year to squander upon such subjects as we may choose to bestow it upon. And being here representing a supposed rich people it is a very natural inclination following out the bent of humanity in all its history that we should fail to consider the wants of the people themselves and turn our attention to the manner in which we shall spend their money.

Sir, while this is going on, and while $100,000,000 a year is being taxed out of the people to pamper the rich and powerful, poverty, wreck, and ruin are tramping about over this land in rags and in sores and want of which Lazarus would have been ashamed. Strikes are occurring all over the land, and we hear of thousands and ten of thousands of men on a single day thrown out of employment in the depth of a cold winter without bread or fuel, and sometimes without sufficient clothing for themselves and their families, to beg and implore the charity of the rich masters by whom they are surrounded. If we would leave this $100,000,000 of money that we tax out of their pockets annually for no good or just reason in their pockets, and if we would let them have the privilege of enjoying something of the manhood of American citizenship along with its liberty, then, sir, we might console ourselves with sweet and pious reflections when we come to the question of the distribution of the money of the people toward public improvements. No, it is "tax," "tax," "tax;" and the moment a Senator dares to open his mouth in this Chamber upon the subject of the relief of the people from taxation, whether it respects their foreign commerce or their internal affairs, the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who never deserts his post when this battle is on hand, rises and rebukes the Senator from Kentucky for daring to refer to the tariff question.

Sir, we will refer to it continually and eternally until justice in some form or other reaches the people that we represent, for if we fail in that we shall fail in the most solemn and important duty that has ever been devolved upon a set of legislators in this country. We have now got to that condition which is the bane of all democratic opinion and belief and the chief desire of all republican hearts; we have reached that condition which has been held to be most deplorable in the estimation of every man who ever belonged to the Democratic party from the days of Jefferson to the present time; we have got a rich government and a poor people—yes, a government that is so rich that it has one hundred millions of surplus revenue annually to disburse among its pets and its favorites through this land, and a people on the other hand so poor that the clamoring cries of many of them for bread and fuel and clothing come up during these wintry blasts and howl down the very storms that rage and reverberate and are now beating upon the walls of the Senate Chamber. They are the people for whom we must not speak. These are the constituents of the honorable Senator from Vermont and myself, in respect of whose sufferings this Senate Chamber must be as silent as the grave.

No, sir; we will speak for them and work for them, relevant or irrelevant, in time or out of time. In season or out of season, let it be understood that the Democratic party of this country stands pledged to relieve the burdens of these people in any and in every way that it can; and from this duty and from this appeal neither will the people be driven away nor will their true representatives be silenced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is to strike out the words which will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

A Committee on Internal Improvements, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all subjects relating to improvements of rivers and harbors, and also the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am on this question paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who is absent. I have not heard any one announce a pair with him on this question; so I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], who I see is not in his seat. I do not know how he would vote, but if he were here, I should vote "yea." While I am up I will also announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WALKER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY]. I understand that if he were here he would vote "yea" on this proposition. I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Colorado that a pair was announced between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] and himself.

Mr. GARLAND. It was announced, but I understand the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] would vote the same way as my colleague would, and I withdraw the announcement.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 11; as follows.

YEAS—36.

Bayard,	Cullom,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Beck,	Dolph,	Logan,	Pugh,
Bowen,	Fair,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Call,	Hawley,	Maxey,	Slater,
Camden,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jackson,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Voorhees.

NAYS—11.

Conger,	Groome,	Palmer,	Sewell,
Frye,	Harris,	Pike,	Sherman.
George,	Lapham,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Farley,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Anthony,	Garland,	Kenna,	Walker,
Blair,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Williams,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Wilson.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pendleton,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] included another amendment, which will be read, the question having been divided.

The SECRETARY. In the next clause, after the word "Senators," it is proposed to strike out:

To which shall be referred all subjects relating to commerce, to shipping, to the merchant marine, and to the Life-Saving Service and light-houses.

So that the clause will read:

A Committee on Commerce, to consist of nine Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I now move that the Committee on Commerce be placed in the list of committees where it was originally placed, next to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I believe the Senate decided that the committees should be arranged alphabetically, and that amendment will be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Rules before we pass from this subject.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. Then I move that Rule XVII be changed to conform to the amendment just made—Rule XVII, in the third line of the first section——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me again to suggest that by unanimous consent we passed over Rule XVII until Rule XXVI should be disposed of. Of course when we get back to Rule XVII the Senator's motion will necessarily come up.

Mr. VEST. I want to finish the question by striking out "Internal Improvements" and putting in "Commerce" in Rule XVII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the rule under consideration, Rule XXVI, must first be perfected.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the following clause in Rule XXVI:—

A Committee on Territories, to consist of seven Senators—

by striking out "seven" and inserting "nine." I have seen most of the members of that committee, I believe, and I find no objection to this on the part of the committee. I would like to say, also, that the questions which come before the Committee on Territories are of very great importance and of course attract the universal attention of the country, and that committee ought to be strong in numbers as well as it is now strong in ability. I think it would be proper to raise that committee to the same number with the other leading committees of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I see no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I now desire to call up the amendment of which I gave notice, and which amendment was entered, at the time this rule was under consideration before, by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state his amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is in regard to the Committee on Agriculture. The motion is to make the clause read:

A Committee on Agriculture, to consist of nine Senators; to which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

I do not desire to discuss this question again, as I spoke upon it the other day when it was first called up; but I understand there are some other Senators who still desire to be heard upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Senators," in the line reading "A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of nine Senators," it is proposed to add:

To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, while I would have preferred that the amendment I proposed a day or two since should have been adopted, I think there are a great many reasons why this proposition of the Senator from New York should pass, more especially in view of the action of the Senate, pursuing the theory of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that there were certain classes in this country who ought to have special representation upon the committees; and as he referred to the real-estate owners of the District of Columbia as being of that class, small though they are in number and receiving a million and a half or two millions per annum out of the Treasury of the United States, it seems to me that we can fairly accord, not merely as a matter of grace but a matter of right, to seven-twelfths of the people of the United States that recognition which we have now accorded to a small portion of them in this District of Columbia.

This interest has never received practical recognition at the hands of Congress. The people who are interested in the legislation proposed by the action of committees which act upon matters connected with agriculture pay a larger proportion of the taxes of the United States than any other class of people. Everything they use is taxed, and in favor of nothing that they raise is anything done. They are, as I think they ought properly to be, jealous of this relative position which they say they occupy in the legislative action of this country. It will not do to say to them that their interest can be cared for by committees or by appliances organized for other purposes. This Committee on Agriculture ought to have charge, upon the theory which the Senate has acted on heretofore, of the bill appropriating for the Agricultural Department. The control of the purse is practically the control of legislation, and the control of legislation affecting this large class of people is of great interest to them and of great interest besides to the entire country. It would, as I said, be a gracious matter; it would not be, on the other hand, conceding more to them than they believe is theirs of right.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], in the remarks which he addressed to the Senate a few days ago on this subject, spoke of a number of questions which have engaged the attention of the country but so far have utterly failed to produce any impression upon this branch of Congress. The pleuro-pneumonia bill, a bill affecting more than $500,000,000 worth of the property of this country, has been so treated here as to beget the idea that this body at least is entirely out of sympathy with the agricultural producers of this country, and so in regard to a large class of cases which affect these people; and it is now for the Senate to say whether they will give that recognition to this class that they deserve, and at the same time respect their opinions in this matter, which have been expressed so fully and so frankly and so unanimously outside, but, as I said, with very little effect inside.

The Agricultural Department is yet in its infancy; its work is yet to be done; population is rapidly pressing upon production. There are many ways in which the operations of this committee, enlarged as they would be by the consideration of the appropriations for the benefit of the Agricultural Department, would be of immense service to this great and greatly preponderating interest.

For these reasons I hope that the motion of the Senator from New York will prevail.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to add an observation or two to what has been said in behalf of this amendment by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kansas, and in the outset I will say that I have no desire to cripple or curtail in any way the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to be the voice of this body that most of the appropriations that we shall make should undergo their scrutiny and supervision; but I take this to be an exceptional case, as much so as the river and harbor bill, which does not go before the Committee on Appropriations. The bill making appropriations for the Agricultural Department is framed in the other end of the Capitol by the Committee on Agriculture. When it comes to the Senate we distrust our committee upon that subject and refer it to the general Committee on Appropriations. There ought to be some good reason why this difference should exist in the rules of the two Houses. I propose to state in a few words the exceptional reasons which I think authorize us and justify us in referring this bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

In the first place, the appropriations made for the Department of Agriculture are not for the regular normal operations of the Government. The Department itself is sui generis. It performs none of the ordinary functions of government. It protects neither life nor liberty nor property. It collects and disburses no revenue. It is not a part of the means of our public defense. It is purely an educational and experimental department. Of the $400,000 appropriated at the last session for this department not exceeding $20,000 was appropriated in pursuance of any law upon the statute-book. The appropriations are made for purposes which are continually changing. They are made for seeds; they are made for experiments in forestry; they are made for the investigation of diseases of animals; for the investigation of insects which are injurious to agriculture; and they are continually changing; the same appropriations are not made every year for the same purposes. The Agricultural Department is very much like an experimental farm run by the Government of the United States. What it may do one year may be and often is very different from what it may do another year. What it does or what it shall do is determined, I wish the Senate to understand, exclusively by the appropriations made. I will read to the Senate some of the appropriations made in the last appropriation act, so that Senators may understand how the thing is done:

For chemicals and apparatus for the use of the chemist and microscopist, and for necessary expenses in conducting experiments, including experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and other vegetable plants, $16,000.

Whether that shall be continued another year or not depends entirely upon the appropriation made, and whether the appropriation is to be made depends upon the judgment which Congress may pass upon that subject. Now, who is more competent to inform the Senate as to the propriety of continuing these experiments—a committee raised for the purpose of looking after the agricultural interests of the country or the general Committee on Appropriations? So, again:

For the purchase and propagation and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, plants, eggs of silk-worms, and expenses of putting up the same, to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $75,000.

All this is matter outside of what may be supposed to be the regular duties of the Committee on Appropriations.

For these reasons, because all the appropriations made for that Department are chargeable, dependent upon the judgment of Congress as to what shall be done this year or next, I submit that it is more appropriate to leave the question of these appropriations to the Agricultural Committee than to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I shall vote with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] on this question, but I am of the opinion that he has given expression to some views on the subject which might be construed as going too far. When the Senator speaks of the agricultural interests of the country not having received the proper recognition by Congress it presents a very interesting and in my opinion a very dangerous topic.

Mr. GEORGE. I said nothing of the sort. That was stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Excuse me; it was the Senator from Kansas, then. I take it that the agriculturists of the country have just as much interest in everything that is done here as any other class of people. This Government is theirs; this Constitution is theirs. They compose a portion of the people of the Union, and the people as a whole have delegated to Congress certain enumerated powers that Congress is required to exercise for the common benefit. Those powers are here in the Constitution. This constitutes our power of attorney from the people of the Union, not from agriculturists, nor manufacturers, nor mechanics, nor railroad laborers, not from any class, but from the entire people; and when a Senator comes forward here and says, as my friend from Kansas did, that the agriculturists have not had sufficient attention paid to them by this Government, he is advancing a very dangerous opinion. The mechanics have just as much right to come here and say that they have had no attention paid to them.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that is quite true.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The sailors have as much right to come here and say that they have had no attention paid to them; the railroad laborers can come here and say, "the Federal Government has not given us the attention we ought to have."

This thing, sir, is all wrong. There are seventeen enumerated clauses of power in the Constitution that the people of the Union have said we shall exercise, and beyond them it would be criminal to go. Every Senator who comes into this body, before he is permitted to discharge his duty, must take an oath to support what? The Constitution of the United States, made by the people, ratified by the people, constituting the frame of this people's government; and in it from beginning to end the word "agriculturist" can not be found. You have power to regulate commerce; you have power to provide a navy, to create an army; you have power to declare war, but there are certain things that are withheld from you. I will go as far in behalf of special interests as anybody when I can get jurisdiction over them, but I will not go outside of the Constitution further than we have traveled in behalf of special interests. I will serve the people to the best of my ability, but I will not violate their own organic law if I know it.

I say if the law is not what it ought to be, change it, but as long as we have a constitution let us try to conform to it. We have created a Bureau of Agriculture, and I will go as far as anybody to support it; but I can not indorse the sentiment of the Senator from Kansas when he says that a particular class of people in the country have not had the attention given to them in the exercise of our Congressional powers that they ought to have.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. Does he think the reference of the agricultural appropriation bill to the Agricultural Committee would be unconstitutional?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, because I am going to vote for it; but when the Senator says the agriculturists or any other class of people have not had sufficient attention given to them by the Government I think he is going a little too far. I will vote for this proposition, and I will do everything I can for the agriculturists, but this organic law of ours was made for the people of the entire Union, and the agriculturists are just as much interested in the general business of the Government as any other class of people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] to amend the paragraph of the rule under consideration as proposed by him.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COKE. I should like to hear the amendment reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the line—

A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of nine Senators—

it is proposed to add:

to which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], who I see is absent. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. INGALLS. I am paired on this question with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Blair,	Dolph,	Lamar,	Pugh,
Bowen,	George,	Lapham,	Slater,
Brown,	Gibson,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Van Wyck.
Colquitt,	Jackson,	Palmer,
Conger,	Jones of Fla.,	Plumb,

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pike,
Bayard,	Fair,	Jones of Nev.,	Platt,
Beck,	Frye,	Logan,	Ransom,
Call,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Hale,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Dawes,	Hill,	Morrill,	Voorhees.

ABSENT—22.

Allison,	Garland,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Anthony,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Walker,
Butler,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Wilson.
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Riddleberger,
Farley,	Kenna,	Sawyer,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to Rule XXVI as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. I move in the clause "a Committee on Commerce, to consist of nine Senators," to strike out "nine" and insert "eleven;" so as to read:

A Committee on Commerce, to consist of eleven Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed the question will be on agreeing to Rule XXVI as amended.

The rule was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I was instructed, I think by a unanimous consent of the Senate, to present Rule XXVI with the list of committees arranged in alphabetical order instead of the present order. I have prepared, in accordance with that request, the rule with the committees in alphabetical order, which I now offer as a substitute for the rule just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that the rule has now been agreed to as amended.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will ask unanimous consent (having been instructed by unanimous consent) to substitute it.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is nothing in the substance of the rule that the Senator desires to amend, it is a mere clerical question which he presents, and it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the rule is not changed in substance, but is the same exactly, it is but conforming to the direction of the Senate. The Senate by unanimous consent directed the Senator from Maine to classify the committees in their alphabetical order, without changing the text.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, without changing the rule at all. That has been done in the form which I now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that Rule XXVI, which has been agreed to, which provides for the standing committees of the Senate, be, when it is engrossed or put into form, changed in respect of the enumeration of the committees alphabetically.

Mr. PLUMB. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the rule was adopted, in order that the Senator from Maine may offer his amendment.

Mr. RANSOM and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to reconsider the vote by which Rule XXVI was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to Rule XXVI.

Mr. FRYE. I now offer the substitute which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXVI.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

1. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee on Appropriations, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of three Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee on Claims, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee on Commerce, to consist of eleven Senators.

A Committee on the District of Columbia, to consist of nine Senators, to which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

A Committee on Education and Labor, to consist of nine Senators.

A Committee on Engrossed Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall examine all bills, amendments, and joint resolutions before they go out of the possession of the Senate.

A Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some one of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed both Houses, to see that the same are correctly enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate, shall forthwith present the same, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.

A Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to consist of seven Senators.

A Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, to consist of five Senators.

A Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, to consist of seven Senators, which shall consider such measures tending to economy in public expenditures as shall be referred to it, and conduct all investigations of the expenditure of public money which shall be ordered by the Senate, unless the Senate shall otherwise direct.

A Committee on Finance, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on Fisheries, to consist of seven Senators, to which shall be referred all matters relating to fish and fisheries.
A Committee on Foreign Relations, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Indian Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Judiciary, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on the Library, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Manufactures, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Military Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Mines and Mining, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Naval Affairs, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Patents, to consist of seven Senators.
A Committee on Pensions, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Printing, to consist of three Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Private Land Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Privileges and Elections, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of five Senators, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
A Committee on Public Lands, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Railroads, to consist of eleven Senators.
A Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Rules, to consist of five Senators.
A Committee on Territories, to consist of nine Senators.
A Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, to consist of seven Senators.
2. The Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Printing, and on the Library shall continue and have power to act until their successors are appointed.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that I consider this amendment decidedly without any merits as a reform. Clearly the committees ought to stand with some reference to their importance or to the date when they were first established. Having stood in that relation for a long series of years, it seems to me much better that they should remain so than to be changed and brought up in a very miscellaneous manner, as they will be brought up by conforming to an alphabetical order. I hope, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rules will not prevail. I should prefer to see the rules stand as they have heretofore stood.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the substitute offered by my colleague by striking out, in the clause relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia, the words:

To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

There have been two votes taken upon that question with different results, the striking out being lost by a tie vote, and I desire another vote upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the substitute proposed by his colleague [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say, in response to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that while I, as the organ of the Senate, offered this amendment, I did not as chairman of the Committee on Rules offer it nor as a Senator myself offer it. I was instructed by the Senate, by unanimous consent, to prepare and offer the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I hope that we shall vote down the amendment proposed by the Senator on my right to change the order of the committees. I prefer the ancient order very much.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the instruction which the Senator from Maine refers to was not an expression of the opinion of the Senate on the merits of the proposition, but merely a suggestion of a method of getting at it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] made the suggestion to change the order of committees, and there was some difficulty raised as to the mode of doing it, whether it should be by a separate order outside of the rules or by an amendment. A suggestion was made that the best way would be to prepare an amendment, by having it referred, to arrange the order of the committees and submit that to the Senate; but it was not the intention (it was not mine when I made the suggestion) to express an opinion on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to be understood as saying that I offered the amendment simply under instructions. I am not myself in favor of the amendment. I believe in the old rule rather than the new one that I have offered myself.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think the RECORD will show that the instruction to the chairman of the committee was to make this change himself, and that no further action of the Senate was contemplated. I am quite certain that it was so.

Mr. FRYE. No; I was instructed to have my clerk prepare it and I was to present it to the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I did not so understand it at the time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I made the suggestion the other day that in arranging the committees they should be arranged alphabetically, and not as they have stood heretofore. I stated at that time, and I am still of the same opinion, that the position of the committees as they now stand does not represent the absolute importance or the relative importance of the committees. To illustrate that, in the present arrangement the Committee on Finance stands before the Committee on Education and Labor. I think that we shall all admit that the Committee on Education and Labor is vastly the more important committee of the two. I do not think even the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] would dispute that statement.

The object that I had more especially in view when I made the suggestion will appear when I state the fact that, as the committees now stand, if a Senator or any other person desires to ascertain who constitute a particular committee he must run over the whole list of committees before he can find the committee that he is in search of. If the committee-list as it now stands did represent the relative importance of the committees, then there would be some force in the objection which the Senator from Vermont makes, but no one will claim that they do as they now stand represent either the absolute or the relative importance of the committees. Then why should they be allowed to stand in the order in which they have stood heretofore? I supposed, until it came out in the discussion the other day, that I was mistaken, that they stood in the order in which they were organized, but it was stated then that the Committee on Appropriations is a committee of comparatively recent origin, and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which now stands at the head of the list, was established only a few years since.

The truth of the matter is that heretofore there has been no system in arranging the committees. For convenience I think they ought to be arranged alphabetically. If the Committee on Rules could determine the relative importance of the committees, then perhaps they might be arranged in view of their relative importance, but inasmuch as there would be a great variety of opinion about the relative importance of the various committees I think probably that they cannot be arranged in view of that. Therefore, I do not see any better rule to arrange them by than to arrange them alphabetically.

Mr. HARRIS. I regret somewhat the turn this matter has taken. I certainly understood, as did the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who offered this amendment understand, that a few days since by unanimous consent he was instructed to have the committees arranged alphabetically. We have gone over Rule XXVI, and have in the ordinary sense perfected it by the action of the Senate; and while the Senator from Maine immediately to my left [Mr. HALE] certainly has the technical right to move to amend the substitute offered, I think it is hardly in keeping with the unanimous-consent rule that was adopted a few days ago to the effect that the committees were simply to be arranged alphabetically after we should have perfected Rule XXVI.

I can see no possible influence that the position a committee may occupy in the list can have in adding to or detracting from the supposed importance of the various committees; but it certainly is a very great convenience to all of us who have occasion to refer to any given committee to have them alphabetically arranged, so that you may reach it in one-eighth of the time that it now requires me habitually to find any single committee on the list.

For that reason, and that reason only, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine on my right [Mr. FRYE], and I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Maine on my left [Mr. HALE] has undertaken to amend the substitute, because if his amendment is adopted (and I do not think it is consistent with the consent rule agreed upon two or three days ago), much as I am in favor of this shaping of the committees, I shall certainly vote against the adoption of the substitute proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me the last thing the Senator from Tennessee can consistently say is that it is unfair to ask another vote of the Senate upon the proposition touching the Committee on the District of Columbia. The rule was voted upon in two places. In one place the Senate struck out the clause giving that committee the appropriations by two majority. In a thinner Senate, with absentees, the Senate refused. Therefore, so far as that question goes, there is at the present moment no decisive action of the Senate upon a most important subject-matter; and all that I seek is that there shall now be one vote which shall settle, if the Senate chooses, which shall be the best two in three.

Mr. HARRIS. My point was that the Senate had instructed the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] simply to change the order of the committees in respect to the formation of this rule. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has had his day in court. The Senate has decided the question. It stands decided. If it was not decided contrary to the wish of the Senator I imagine he would not seek to offer an amendment, but would let the matter remain as it is.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has reconsidered the vote adopting the rule, and had not that motion been made by my colleague for one purpose, I should have made it for another, simply, as I have said, to get at the deliberate judgment of the Senate upon this important question. I shall take no time; I shall simply call for the yeas and nays; and the roll-call will determine on reflection what the Senate wishes as to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment in regard to the arrangement of the committees will prevail. It would be a great convenience. Any Senator who has been on a subcommittee of the caucuses on either side of the Chamber for the purpose of arranging the membership of the various committees will recognize the convenience that such an arrangement of the committees would afford. Now they are not arranged according to the date of their formation, nor according to their importance, as was clearly shown by my friend from Wisconsin. There is no regularity or system about their present arrangement. Arrange them alphabetically, and let all subsequent committees, if any shall be formed, be placed in the list according to their place in the alphabet. Then we shall have a system, we shall have an order; we shall have regularity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senate, in respect of the supposed unanimous understanding, that he finds in the RECORD of the proceedings of the 7th of January that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] made the motion or suggestion to have the committee-list arranged alphabetical. Passing over some desultory talk about it and coming down to the precise point, the RECORD reads:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is put in the nature of an order and does not come in the body of the rules.

That is, the alphabetical arrangement.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not care to have it in the rules.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator wants to have it in the rules at all, the best way would be to have Rule XXVI rearranged by changing the order of the paragraphs. I suggest to the Senator that he have a clerk do that, and when that rule which has been reserved, by reason of the absence of the Senator from Iowa, to be considered at a future day comes up, then to have that change made, and then the list will appear in the rules in alphabetical order. Then the little document which is distributed will follow the order of the rule. The clerk of the Committee on Rules can make up that order, to be ready when the rule is taken up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the chairman of the Committee on Rules will heed the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. FRYE. I will look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed order, the Chair understands, is withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE. Withdrawn, and at the request of the Senator I will ask the clerk of the Committee on Rules to draft a rule having the committees in their regular alphabetical order, and offer it as a substitute when final action comes on the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments, &c.

So that the Chair does not understand from the RECORD that there was any unanimous agreement that this arrangement by alphabet should be made, but that it should be brought forward as the Senator from Maine has done at this time. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine on the left of the Chair [Mr. HALE], to amend the substitute by striking out the provision that appropriation bills in reference to the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be referred to that committee. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Maine desires a full vote on this proposition I think it is but fair to those Senators who are absent to give him that vote. Therefore I will move that the Senate adjourn. It is now 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is some executive business on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will change the motion to a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Before that motion is put I wish to make a report from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion for that purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will yield for any formal business.

JAMES M. WILBUR.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (S. 411) for the relief of James M. Wilbur without recommendation. The committee has come to this agreement at the request of the claimant. He is of the opinion that he can obtain relief in the Treasury Department without application to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks leave, which will be granted if there be no objection, to report the bill indicated from the Committee on Claims, and he asks that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. Is there objection? Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire the bill to go on the Calendar, or to be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. LAPHAM. As I introduced the bill, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it. The applicant has obtained a decision from the Solicitor of the Treasury which gives him all the relief he needs, but the Secretary of the Treasury is unwilling to act while the bill is pending here. If I may be permitted to withdraw it, if that is permissible under the rules, I should like to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rules it is not permissible; but by unanimous consent the Chair thinks almost anything can be done.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Claims may be withdrawn from the files and records of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I shall object unless there is some advantage to the interest which the Senator is now guarding. The ordinary course would be to lay the bill on the table; and I suppose if the bill were laid on the table the papers might be withdrawn, and that would be a final disposition of the whole matter under our rules. It seems to me that it would inaugurate a new parliamentary method to withdraw an original document which has become a part of the legislative history of the country which might some time "return to plague the inventor." I suggest to the Senator from New York that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM. It would then be liable to be called up.

Mr. HOAR. Then let it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am not anxious as to the course to be pursued, only I want to relieve the Secretary of the Treasury, who while any question is pending here is unwilling to act.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the Senator have unanimous leave to withdraw all papers connected with the bill and that the bill itself be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LAPHAM. The applicant does not need the papers which are here. He has papers in the Treasury Department which are satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the withdrawal of the bill; and if there be no objection the bill will be laid on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is laid on the table.

UTAH TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I shall ask to call up the bill (S. 404) to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah, for the purpose of making some remarks upon it, after which I shall move its reference to the appropriate committee.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. VEST, it was Ordered, That the claimants in the case of Senate bill No. 749, entitled "A bill for the relief of persons to whom the governors of the Northwest and Indiana Territories confirmed lands, which lands were afterwards sold by the United States," be allowed to withdraw the papers filed by them in said case from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Joseph H. Maddox be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 8 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 10, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent, and, as the Chair understands, there is objection.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GIBSON. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The reading of the Journal was then concluded.

The Journal as corrected was then approved.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, my colleague Mr. MARTIN L. CLARDY, who has been absent since the organization of the House on account of sickness, is now present, and I ask that he be sworn in as a member of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. CLARDY appeared at the Speaker's desk, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

ALLEGED CUSTOMS FRAUDS.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the following preamble and resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the special supervising agent of the Treasury Department has declared that systematic frauds upon the customs revenue are perpetrated by invoice undervaluations of merchandise consigned to the United States for sale by the foreign manufacturers, and that certain consular officers of the United States are cognizant of such undervaluations and have repeatedly reported them to the Treasury and the State Departments: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be transmitted to this House copies of all such consular communications since January 1, 1883, either to the State or Treasury Department, as made allusions to such frauds upon the customs revenue of the United States by foreign manufacturers; and to inform the House whether or not there is reason to believe that any consular officers have certified invoices to be true which such officers should have known, or did at the time of such certification know, were not true; and also to inform the House whether or not additional legislation is needed to compel foreign manufacturers to set forth and declare on the invoices of merchandise manufactured and consigned by them for sale in the United States the actual market value thereof, or the price at which such manufacturers would be willing to sell such merchandise in wholesale quantities; and furthermore to inform the House what additional legislation, if any, is needed, and is feasible, to enable the appraisers at the several ports to estimate and appraise the dutiable value of such merchandise at the time and place of shipment to the United States, and whether or not, in his opinion, it is for the advantage of the revenue that the invoice value of merchandise consigned to the United States by the manufacturer shall be at the time and place of "manufacture" (section 2854), but the dutiable value be estimated and appraised as at the time and place of shipment, as now required by law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to have the preamble again read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, subject to objection.

The preamble was again read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that the resolution had better go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. Where does the gentleman from New York desire the resolution to go?

Mr. HISCOCK. To the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York consent to its reference?

Mr. BELMONT. Very well; let the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The preamble and resolution were received, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ASSISTANT JOURNAL CLERK.

Mr. BLAND. I offer the following resolution for present action.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant to the Journal Clerk for the remainder of this Congress, the said clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund the per diem and compensation received by committee clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that resolution is introduced for reference I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks for its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object, unless the resolution is referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri consent to its reference?

Mr. BLAND. Very well; let it be referred.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Accounts.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS—COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to offer a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be appointed, as clerks of committees are appointed, two additional clerks for the Committee on Invalid Pensions; that there shall be paid to each of said additional clerks the same rate of compensation, out of the contingent fund of the House, as was paid to each additional clerk of said committee in the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses.

Mr. RANDALL. Let that go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Committee on Accounts.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask leave to offer a similar resolution for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the clerkship of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be, and the same is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation fixed at $2,000 per annum; and the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay the clerk of said committee, out of the contingent fund for the present session, compensation at the above rate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask leave to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River are hereby authorized and instructed to investigate the present manner of improving the Mississippi River and its tributaries, to consider the proper methods of continuing said improvements, the amount necessary for the completion of said work, and the amount that should be expended annually, with the right to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HUNT. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask, then, that the resolution be referred.

Mr. HUNT. I have objected to the introduction of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House for reference.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I offer the following resolution, proposing an amendment to the rules, for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XI, section 21, so as to read:

To the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries—to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. And the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and its levees as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNT. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is it introduced for reference?

The SPEAKER. For reference only.

Mr. HUNT. I object to the introduction of it.

The SPEAKER. If objection is made the resolution must lie over under the rules for one day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The introduction of the rule was objected to.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House it will lie over for one day and then go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Was not the introduction of the resolution objected to?

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Louisiana to object to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. That of course would exclude it entirely. It would have to come in in some other manner.

PAY OF A PAGE.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Clarence W. De Knight having been regularly appointed and sworn in as a page to the House of Representatives December 3, 1883, and having performed the duties of and served in that capacity from said date to December 10, both days inclusive: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay him out of the contingent fund of the House for the time he served at the rate of $2.50 per day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Very well, let it be referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

FRAUDS IN CUSTOMS REVENUE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask consent to submit for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with any information in his possession concerning the undervaluation, false classification, and other irregular practice in the importation of foreign goods, wares, and merchandise since January 1, 1882, and in his discretion prior thereto; and that he be requested to report whether any legislation is needed to prevent fraud on the revenue resulting from the causes above specified.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that this resolution is substantially the same as that introduced by my colleague [Mr. BELMONT]. I withdrew my objection to that and make no objection to this.

The SPEAKER. The resolution submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] has been already referred.

Mr. RANDALL. Let both, then, go together to the committee, or both be acted on together—the one submitted by Mr. BELMONT to come up for consideration first in its order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That has been already referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KEIFER. Let both go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] obtained consent of the House some days ago for the adoption of a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information in connection with the duties on wool. If this resolution should be adopted before the Secretary makes that report the information will be made more comprehensive, and will embrace all frauds arising out of undervaluation, &c.

Mr. RANDALL. I have read in print both the original report referred to in the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] and the supplementary report, in which are embraced wools, silks, velvets, and everything else as to which information can be quickly transmitted. What is wanted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury how to prevent in the future these frauds by means of undervaluations, duplicate invoices, false classification, &c.

Mr. MILLS. We want something more general than was embraced in the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio. We want from the Secretary of the Treasury the specific facts as to all these undervaluations as far as he knows them.

Mr. RANDALL. They are already in print so far as I know, and I have read both the reports. I wish to expedite the matter, and that is why I made the suggestion that the original proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], which was a little more comprehensive than the other, should be acted upon at once.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to say a word if the House will allow me one moment. My resolution is in no sense antagonistic to that offered by my colleague [Mr. BELMONT]. On the contrary, when I heard his resolution read I at first thought it might be best not to offer this. But the answer to this resolution, which is addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury and not to the President, is necessary in order that an intelligent consideration may be given to the resolution offered by my colleague. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] the other day obtained unanimous consent to offer a resolution, which the House adopted, calling for this information as to wools and wools only. The object of this resolution is to get this information as to other articles besides wools, that the committee may be able to make an intelligent report on the proposition offered by my colleague.

Mr. BELMONT. I think the reading of the resolution which I offered would show that the points of the resolution of my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] are also covered in my resolution; and if my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] has withdrawn his objection——

The SPEAKER. Objection has not been withdrawn. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution with the view of having it referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDALL. Objection was made, and under that objection the gentleman offering the resolution asked that it might be referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, by consent that objection is now withdrawn, and by the same consent the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] could again have his proposition brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York in front of the Chair [Mr. HISCOCK] to withdraw his objection; but several other gentlemen objected to the immediate consideration of the resolution, and asked that it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means. If there be no further objection this resolution will take that course.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a committee of thirteen members, to which shall be referred all bills or resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution.

BUSINESS OF FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. MCADOO, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee report to this House, by bill or otherwise, such measures as in their opinion will decrease the number of cases originating in or on appeal in the Federal courts, looking to the decrease of business in said courts and the curtailing of the jurisdiction of the same.

TAX ON TOBACCO, ETC.

Mr. FIEDLER. I ask unanimous consent to offer for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to communicate to this House what amount of money is required to pay the rebate of taxes due to the dealers on unbroken packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, cigars, &c., and when such information has been received the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to provide by bill or otherwise an appropriation necessary to discharge the obligation of the United States Government.

Mr. WILLIS. If my friend will allow me to make a suggestion I will say to him that that information is already before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go to the Appropriations Committee.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask unanimous consent to offer, for reference to the Committee on Accounts, the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the clerkship of the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and the same is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation fixed at $1,800 per annum, and the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay the clerk of said committee, out of the contingent fund for the present session, at the above rate.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, unless the resolution is offered for reference.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is offered for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RANDALL. The proposition being to make the clerkship an annual one, the resolution ought to go to some other committee than the Committee on Accounts. That part of it which requires legislation of the two Houses should go to the Committee on Appropriations, because such legislation would require to be inserted in an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The resolution provides that the compensation of the clerk shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. But it provides further that the clerkship shall be an annual one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. The first part of the resolution changes the law.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will say to the gentleman that the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress was an annual clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. That was by law; and if this provision is again made it must be by legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TALBOTT. We do not care, so it is considered.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CASTLE ISLAND, IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 101) authorizing the President of the United States to permit the occupancy of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor, by the municipal authorities in Boston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DONATING CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3041) granting condemned cannon to Capt. Thomas Espy Post, No. 153, Grand Army of the Republic of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD SCHEUDEL.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3042) granting a pension to Edward Scheudel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NORTH CAROLINA CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. O'HARA, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3043) to pay certain expenses of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS WORTHINGTON.

Mr. ROSECRANS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3044) for the relief of Thomas Worthington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

I. M. HOGAN.

Mr. BUDD (by request) introduced, by unanimous consent, a bill (H. R. 3045) for the relief of I. M. Hogan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PERKINS. I introduced a bill (H. R. 552) granting a pension to Lemuel J. Bennett, which was referred by mistake to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It relates to the Mexican war, and should be referred to the Committee on Pensions. I ask consent that the reference be changed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit a privileged report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to whom was referred the following resolution, namely:

"Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby requested by the House of Representatives to furnish the House with an itemized account of all the expenditures in the Department of Justice in the prosecution of the so-called star route-cases"— having had the same under consideration, have directed me to report a substitute therefor. The information called for by the said resolution has already been supplied to the Senate and directed to be printed by that body, hence the committee does not deem it necessary to require the same to be furnished to the House. But inasmuch as the committee is directed by the rules of the House to examine all the accounts and expenditures of the Department of Justice, the manner of keeping the same, the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures, the proper application of public moneys, the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands, retrenchment, the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States, the economy and accountability of public officers, the abolishment of useless offices, the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, therefore, to enable the committee to make the proper inquiry, to ascertain the facts and report them to the House, the adoption of the following resolution is recommended as a substitute for the resolution referred to the committee, namely:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice in making the investigations required by the rules of the House be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer and also a messenger, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, but not exceeding the compensation of other employés of the House in like positions."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question on adopting the report and agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. REED. Has the committee a right to submit a proposition of that kind as a substitute? Is that substitute in order? I make the point that it is not in order. A resolution was referred to the committee in regard to a specific matter, and the committee report that an answer is already made to the resolution and it is not necessary for the House to do anything in regard to it; therefore they propose as a substitute something entirely different.

Now, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] thinks that he wants to investigate that Department, if he will come in in the regular way I will not have the slightest objection; but this looks to me like "climbing over the wall."

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] state what will be the regular way, if this is not?

Mr. REED. I should not venture to instruct the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then allow "the gentleman from Illinois" to instruct the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I can not do that, for I can not afford to be filled with misinformation. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman would have us understand that he has no room for correct information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] makes the point of order that the substitute reported by the committee is not in order because it is not upon the same subject as the original resolution, and therefore not germane to the subject referred to that committee.

The resolution referred to the committee is one calling upon the Attorney-General for certain information. The resolution reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute is one authorizing the committee to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, make certain investigations, and employ a stenographer. The Chair thinks the substitute is not germane to the resolution referred to the committee.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Illinois should endeavor to restrain himself within the rules of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it not have been in order to move this resolution in the House as a substitute for the original resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, because the original resolution was simply one of inquiry, directed to the head of a Department, and under the rules of the House such a resolution must be reported back within one week. If it was permitted in reference to a resolution of that sort to report back something entirely different, the Chair thinks the purpose of the rule would be defeated.

Mr. SPRINGER. The object of the original resolution, as I understand, was to obtain certain information from the Department of Justice. The committee reports that the information is now accessible to it, but desires to obtain the papers referred to in this substitute—such papers as may be in any of the Departments of the Government. But, as the Chair has ruled that the proposed substitute is not in order as an amendment to this resolution, I ask unanimous consent to report the resolution, as instructed by the committee, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman propose to do with his report—withdraw it?

Mr. SPRINGER. The report, of course, in so far as it reports back the resolution, is in order.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman reports back the resolution with a substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no right to make any other report than that, so far as the committee is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair determines that the substitute is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask leave then to withdraw the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on disposing of the report. Of course if there be no objection it can lie on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask leave to withdraw it.

There being no objection, the report was withdrawn.

Mr. REED. I think now we had better have the regular order, so as to give the gentleman from Illinois time from now until Monday next to think this matter over.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask to offer the resolution which has been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to introduce a resolution—for present consideration and reference?

Mr. SPRINGER. For consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been read. The gentleman from Maine demands the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not so understand.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I do not understand what the resolution is.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, in making the investigations required by the rules of the House, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer and also a messenger, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, but not exceeding the compensation of other employés of the House in like positions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I should think this ought to go to the Committee on Accounts, which is entitled to consider whether it is necessary to expend anything from the contingent fund for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I object. It may go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire it to go to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. REED. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the first business in order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MOULTON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time several bills, as I was unable to be here last Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the request while the demand for the regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the call for the regular order.

JACOB FOUKE.

Mr. MOULTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3046) to increase the pension of Jacob Fouke; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY D. CALDWELL.

Mr. MOULTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3047) for the increase of pension of Henry D. Caldwell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN E. LEWIS.

Mr. MOULTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3048) granting a pension to John E. Lewis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALFRED H. LOWE.

Mr. MOULTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3049) for the relief of Alfred H. Lowe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY STILGEBOWER AND OTHERS.

Mr. MOULTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3050) for the relief of Mary Stilgebower, and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN SEARS.

Mr. MOULTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3051) for the payment of the legal representatives of John Sears; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in reply to a resolution of the House, stating that he has no knowledge of the distribution of circulars in his Department asking contributions for political purposes in violation of law; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. BLUNT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting the claim of William E. Blunt, postmaster at Haverhill, Mass., in accordance with the act of Congress of March 17, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETACA GRANT, NO. 105.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplemental report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on private land claim known as Petaca grant, No. 105; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the distribution of circulars asking contributions for political purposes in violation of law; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following communication; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Elections:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement of papers on file in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives in relation to contested-election cases in the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Testimony and papers in the following contested-election cases, to wit:
Alexander C. Botkin against Martin Maginnis, from the Territory of Montana.
George H. Craig against Charles M. Shelley, from the State of Alabama.
J. R. Chalmers against Van H. Manning, from the State of Mississippi.
James E. Campbell against H. L. Morey, from the State of Ohio.
William E. English against Stanton J. Peelle, from the State of Indiana.
Ben T. Frederick against James Wilson, from the State of Iowa.
George T. Garrison against Robert M. Mayo, from the State of Virginia.
John W. Jones against Charles M. Shelley, from the State of Alabama.
Papers relating to reports made by supervisors of the late general election in Colorado.
John E. Massey against John S. Wise, from the State of Virginia.
F. A. Manzanares against Tranquilino Luna, from the Territory of New Mexico.
James H. McLean against James O. Broadhead, from the State of Missouri.
Charles T. O'Ferrell against John Paul, from the State of Virginia.
Jonathan H. Wallace against William McKinley, from the State of Ohio.
S. N. Wood against S. R. Peters, from the State of Kansas.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PEELLE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The House will now proceed with the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports.

FORT WORTH NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. 1574) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Fort Worth, Tex.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to offer for present consideration the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to have printed and bound such documents for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

Mr. MORRISON. That is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF AMERICAN SHIP-BUILDING.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3055) to encourage American ship-building for the foreign carrying trade; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, and ordered to be printed.

INCORPORATION ACTS OF TERRITORIES.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3058) to amend section 1889, of chapter 1, title 23, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to general incorporation acts of Territories; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire that that bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule all bills affecting Territories go to the Committee on Territories; but if the gentleman desires to move the reference of the bill to another committee the Chair will entertain such motion.

Mr. BRENTS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ISSUE OF GOLD AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to submit a resolution requesting information of the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the issue of gold and silver certificates. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read and acted upon now.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to state to this House the amount of gold certificates issued by the Treasury Department between December 1, 1878, and December 1, 1881; and if none were issued between these dates, his reasons for non-issue are hereby requested; and that he also state the amount issued during the years 1882 and 1883, and his reasons for the limited issue thereof during these years; and that he further state to this House his reasons for discontinuing the issue of silver certificates since 1881, and his reasons for not issuing gold and silver certificates, as required to be done by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 11, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 448) to fix the times for holding the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Citizens' Suffrage Association of Philadelphia, Pa., requesting the protection of all United States citizens in their right to vote. I desire to state in this connection that the resolution was forwarded to me by Miss Susan B. Anthony with the request that I call special attention to the subject. I move that the resolution be referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of jobbers and dealers in manufactured tobacco, citizens of Atchison, Kans., praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas who were soldiers in the late war, praying for additional relief by way of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM presented the petition of John W. Cater, surviving partner of the firm of Aymar & Co., importers, of New York city, and the petition of the trustees of the estate of David Wood, of New York city, praying for the payment of their claims against the United States for a refund of customs duties; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Hamilton, citizens of Wisconsin, praying Congress to declare valid the acts of the United States land officers in making sales to them of lands lying within the limits of the ancient land grant in Upper Michigan, known as the Ontonagon and Brulé River grant; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Florida living along the line of the Tropical Florida Railroad, praying that no indemnity of United States homesteadable lands be allowed that road for lands heretofore located and settled by individuals upon the alternate sections within the six-mile limits; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Galveston, Tex., praying for a tobacco-rebate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 713) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 538) for the relief of William H. Beck, assignee of A. Burwell, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine at Bangor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 672) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes in relation to patents, reported it without amendment.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to offer the following resolution, and to ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the latest Army Register be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if that is the usual number we have had.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the usual edition. It is from the type which are now standing, and can be printed within our rules.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL REGISTER.

Mr. HAWLEY. Similarly I am directed by the Committee on Printing to submit the following resolution concerning the Naval Register:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the latest Naval Register by printed for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 34) for the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000, in accordance with the urgent request of the Mississippi River Commission, for the preservation, repair, and construction of certain works for the improvement of said river, to report it without amendment.

I need not say anything more than is known to every member of this body as to the importance and necessity of this appropriation urged so strongly by the Mississippi River Commission and also by a special message from the President of the United States. I would ask, if it be proper, that the joint resolution may have immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, that is a very large appropriation, and I should like to have the Senator reporting it explain what the purpose is and how the application of the money is limited. I am myself in favor of liberal appropriations for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. I believe some two thousand millions of tons annually are borne on the waters of the whole length of that river, and it is, of course, one of the most important interests of the country; but the Senate on full discussion two years ago provided that the moneys then appropriated should be limited to the improvement of the navigation of the river as distinguished from the safety of the land from overflow. I am not speaking now of my own individual opinion, but of what was adopted by Congress.

The President recommended a much more liberal and expensive policy. The President recommended by his special message an appropriation which he said in that message would probably reach $30,000,000, and a good many persons of pretty large experience and sound judgment supposed that the scheme then recommended by the President would amount to at least $50,000,000 before it was fully carried out.

Congress carefully provided that no portion of the money expended by the commission should be applied to the system of levees, thereby saving to the country in comparison with the policy proposed by the President nearly or quite $30,000,000. I wish to know whether this resolve goes on the President's theory of expenditure or on that adopted by Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that, as I understand, the policy of the act to which he refers is to be continued beyond a doubt. This appropriation of $1,000,000 at this time is not only necessary upon the same principle upon which we made the appropriation to which the Senator refers, but on account of the additional fact that the work is now, from the exhaustion of the money before appropriated, in such a position that it is absolutely necessary to make a speedy and prompt appropriation for the purpose of saving what has already been done and protecting the works and machinery which are already in use there; and the danger of the wet season coming on immediately, leaving it in this unfinished condition, would have a tendency to do more injury really than the amount of $1,000,000 which it is proposed to appropriate. I suppose there can be no question as to that. If the Senator has any doubt upon that point he can suggest an amendment to the effect that the money shall be used in the manner heretofore limited.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish simply to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the joint resolution itself without the preamble be read, and I think he will then see that the appropriation itself does not extend the provisions of the law. Let the joint resolution itself be read without the preamble.

Mr. HOAR. I am myself in favor of a very liberal appropriation for the Mississippi River. I think it is a matter of national concern, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. But I think it important that we should understand, and that the country should understand, upon which theory we are proceeding, whether upon the theory urged upon us by the special message sent in by the President, which would add $50,000,000 certainly (as the President himself thought $30,000,000) to the expenditure proposed two years ago, or on the more economical theory of the act actually passed year before last.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the reason why I ask for the reading of the joint resolution. Let the joint resolution be read as it is, without the preamble. There is a preamble as long as my arm. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the joint resolution.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River, which said sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission created by an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters," approved June 28, 1879.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desired that the joint resolution should be read simply to show to the Senator from Massachusetts that this does not change the existing law at all. The commission have reported a plan and system of improvements at certain reaches in the river, and now this is simply to carry it on under the existing law without enlarging it in any shape, manner, or form.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts for a moment. The very praiseworthy recommendation of the President to which he alluded was not adopted by the Congress. For one I advocated it, and I hope that before this session adjourns we shall work up to it. But the appropriation of $5,000,000 for this river specifically was made and limited under the act of the 28th of June, 1879. The commission now come forward and report that without this additional appropriation they must stop the work that has begun and must lose that. They ask for an additional appropriation of $1,000,000 to complete that work for which we have appropriated already. We did not take the liberal proposition of the President, but we restricted it, as the Senator from Missouri remembers, under the act of June 28, 1879, and this appropriation is to be restricted in the same way. We hope after a while to come up to the high standard erected by the President in this matter; but for the time being, in order to complete the work that is being done, we ask for this appropriation; and it has received the indorsement already of two committees at this session.

Mr. DAWES. Would it be in order to amend the joint resolution and make it a bill? It seems to me that it is very much better that any such provision as that should be in the form of a bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that when we adopt the enacting part of it, then we shall strike out the resolving clause and the preamble and make it a bill.

Mr. DAWES. I think the method of appropriating money by joint resolution is not a good one.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be passed, and then we can strike out the preamble and put a title to it as a bill.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make an inquiry of some one who is familiar with the subject. Perhaps the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] will be able to answer. I wish to know how much money it is proposed to appropriate for this purpose during the current year of which this is to be a part, and how much it will take to carry out the present plan under which the river is being improved?

Mr. JONAS. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas I will say that the report of the Mississippi River Commission, to whom by law has been intrusted the prosecution of this work and whose plans have been approved by Congress, is before the Senate. The commission have asked this year for an appropriation of about $3,500,000, provided that the work to be carried on shall be limited to the two reaches on which they have been engaged for the past two years. If the New Madrid reach is to be included, then they ask for an additional appropriation of $1,000,000. Out of this amount of $3,500,000 they ask for $1,000,000 now for an emergency. Congress, at its last session, as the Senator will remember, failed to pass any appropriation for the Mississippi River, and the appropriation made at the former session has been exhausted. A large amount of labor is still employed, a great deal of work is still incomplete, which is threatened with injury by the winter and spring floods, and a large and valuable plant which has been collected along the river belonging to the Government and in use by the Mississippi River Commission is exposed to danger and destruction.

Of course this appropriation, if made, will be subject to all the restrictions which have been put upon the use of the money appropriated by Congress hitherto for the improvement of the Mississippi, and will be deducted from any appropriation which may be made by the present Congress for the prosecution of the work.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The Chief Clerk will again report the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let only the enacting part be read. The preamble need not be again read.

Mr. PLUMB. Omit the preamble.

The Chief Clerk again read the joint resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not make the inquiry which I made a moment ago for the purpose of interposing any objection to this appropriation or of saying anything in the nature of criticism upon the work which is to be carried on; but following the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana I ask him if it would not be better that there should be a direct reference to the law under which the Mississippi River Commission is operating?

Mr. GARLAND. There is.

Mr. PLUMB. My recollection is that the money is to be expended according to the report of the commission and under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GARLAND. According to the act of the 28th of June, 1879.

Mr. PLUMB. I overlooked that.

Mr. GARLAND. That is in the joint resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to make a remark by way of suggestion, because we have had a little controversy here about the question whether levees were to be built or not; and about that the Senate divided. I believe, and I think everybody else does, that this appropriation, and all such appropriations, will practically result in building levees. I am not going to say that they are not necessary for the purpose of carrying out this plan, but I wish to suggest that if we build levees they can only be kept up in one way, and that is by traversing them by railroads. It is capable of demonstration that a railroad can be built, with very little added cost, along the bank of the river where levees are constructed for the purpose of keeping the channel within bounds. It will be not only an economical provision, but the only practical method of keeping the levees in repair against the contingencies which that immense body of water, swollen as it is at times, is bound to constantly present.

I believe that we shall finally be constrained, not only by reason of a judicious expenditure of the public money but as an aid to the only effective way of improving the Mississippi River, to build a railroad along each bank for the purpose of protecting it, and as a matter of course incidentally and also very significantly adding to the transportation facilities of the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that the joint resolution was reported favorably this morning by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair is advised.

Mr. PLATT. And one objection carries it over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not now. Unanimous consent has been given to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that objections were called for, and as none were made the joint resolution is now before the Senate by unanimous consent, and one objection will not carry it over.

Mr. PLATT. All I desire to say is that, if the joint resolution is to be pressed for consideration this morning, I propose to content myself with voting against it. I do not think that we ought, even in as important a matter as the improvement of the Mississippi River, to pass a bill which appropriates $1,000,000, which does not lie upon our desks, and which we have no opportunity of examining except as it is read at the Secretary's desk.

Without any reference to whether the appropriation is proper or not, but solely with reference to the fact that I deem it to be an indiscreet and dangerous way of appropriating money, I desire to have it understood that my vote will be in opposition to the joint resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I have read now, since my remarks, a moment ago, the joint resolution. It does not convey the construction or limitation which I supposed. The reference here to the act is simply for the purpose of describing the commission. It simply speaks of a certain commission that was created by a certain act, and the appropriation is not limited in any way except by the recommendations which that commission have made.

As I said, the matter of the construction of levees has been made the subject of discussion and of division in the Senate, and I think it is hardly fair now to appropriate money which may be used outside of the limitations heretofore created by statute. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he should so amend the joint resolution as that the money shall be appropriated according to the directions contained in the last appropriation act, whether it be the river and harbor act or some other.

Mr. JONAS. "Subject to the provisions of the last appropriation made in the river and harbor act."

Mr. PLUMB. That will answer.

Mr. JONAS. The Senate divided on that.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by stating: "And subject to the provisions and limitations of the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River contained in the river and harbor act of August, 1882."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had better prepare his amendment in writing and send it to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. PLUMB. It is suggested that inasmuch as this is a matter of some importance the joint resolution should lie over for the time being in order that it may be put into such shape as to encounter no opposition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It can gather none now. The point has been conceded. An amendment has been suggested and accepted that will remove all objection to the proposition.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have the amendment here which is desired, I suppose.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There is no objection to the amendment at all.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The provision in the last river and harbor act in relation to the expenditures for the improvement of the Mississippi River reads as follows:

Provided, further, That the money hereby appropriated shall be used solely for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and no part thereof shall be expended with the view to the improvement of private property.

Mr. HAWLEY. Put that on.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Insert the same proviso as an amendment to the joint resolution, to come in at the end.

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw the amendment I offered for the purpose of permitting the Senator from New York to offer his.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move as an amendment the proviso which I have read. I would strike out the words "and its tributaries," as this appropriation applies only to the Mississippi, as I understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be reported by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the joint resolution be reported as amended.

The joint resolution was read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that if the frame is to be so changed as to make this a bill instead of a joint resolution, the amendment had better be made now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, then, to strike out the enacting clause of the joint resolution and the preamble and to insert:

A bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HAWLEY. It should read: "A bill making an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River."

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no necessity for that. It is a bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and it shows in itself what it is for.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is usual to put in the word "appropriation" in the title.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest further that it should read: "A bill making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River."

Mr. HAWLEY. That is better still.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These suggestions are not made in the nature of a motion to amend.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A bill making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was changed to "A bill (S. 1038) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Mississippi River."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be regarded as having been read twice and being now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. Before the final vote on the bill I desire to enter a protest against the bill being reported and passed as a report from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries. The appropriations upon this subject have been reported heretofore from the Committee on Commerce; the last appropriation and all the appropriations. In the absence of the members of that committee, or without attention to it, when the joint resolution had been referred to the Committee on Commerce and a report made by the committee for this purpose, it was found that in some manner the reference had been changed, probably by a suggestion without attention being called to it. By the determination of the Senate these appropriations go to the Committee on Commerce and are reported in the river and harbor bill, as determined in the Senate heretofore. Whatever appropriation is made now is a preliminary appropriation only to carry on work until the river and harbor bill shall be completed.

While I shall not oppose the passage of the bill now and shall vote for it, I desire to say that it should have been reported by the committee making the general report for this improvement. When the Committee on Commerce made their report for the improvement of this river they should, and will undoubtedly, take into consideration this preliminary appropriation as a part of the general appropriation for the Mississippi River for this year, and it should have been reported by that committee, so as to be a part of their general report for the year.

I make these remarks that it may not hereafter be assumed that without objection this appropriation has come from another committee, and that it may not be claimed that it is independent of the general appropriations to be reported in the river and harbor bill. This is not to be taken as a precedent for any future legislation on this subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE. I offer an order——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order has not been reached yet. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to introduce, without previous notice, a bill, the title of which I ask to have read.

By unanimous consent obtained, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 1039) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the Arctic seas; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the reference of the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, where I presume it will go—for although it provides payments, yet it is particular, special payments, and is therefore not any otherwise an appropriation than a pension bill is—I wish to say that I hope the Committee on Naval Affairs will favorably consider the bill. It may be that the sums are not precisely such as the committee would think wise, but in respect of affording relief to the survivors of the Jeannette expedition and the widows of those who are lost I hope the bill will receive favorable consideration.

I was opposed to the sending forth of that expedition, and I think I prophesied, because every man thinks he is a prophet himself, that we should be obliged to send another expedition to recover that lost one, and it turned out to be so. I have been of opinion for a long time that the advantages to be gained for science (and that is all there is to it, because practically navigation in those waters is out of the question) were altogether incommensurate with the loss of life and exposure of the brave men who were induced or who were willing to undertake such expeditions; but as it was undertaken under the auspices of the Government of the United States, I think we ought to make every reparation and provision reasonably in our power for the people who imperiled their lives and the representatives of those who lost their lives in that expedition.

In connection with the bill I ask leave to send to the Committee on Naval Affairs a letter from the honorable Secretary of the Navy addressed to me upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. Should not the letter be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the letter will be printed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1040) to provide for the construction of a public building at New Albany, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1041) for the relief of the heir of Constantino Brumidi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COKE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1042) for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Capt. John G. Tod, of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1043) to quiet certain land titles in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CALL (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1044) to establish a university of medicine at the capital of the United States, in the District of Columbia, for the advancement of science and the discovery of improved methods of treatment and cure of disease; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1045) providing for the establishment of a system of postal savings-banks in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMDEN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1046) increasing pension of Martha P. Stribling; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1047) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAWYER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1048) appropriating a certain sum of money therein named to William S. Stanley, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLATER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1049) for the relief of Henry H. Woodward, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Daniel Mershon, jr., be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of M. C. Frambes and others, owners of the schooner T. P. Learned, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, no report having been made.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, it was Ordered, That Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter be permitted to withdraw the papers in his case from the Senate.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the case of Robert Sheridan be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

FLORIDA RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to send to the Senate copies of all letters, statements, and other papers in the possession of the Interior Department relating to the grant of lands made by the United States to the Florida Railroad, or to the State of Florida for the Florida Railroad, or relating to the reservation of any of said lands for the benefit of the assignees of said road, including the railroad from Waldo to Tampa, Fla.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Calendar of resolutions offered on previous days is in order. The Chair sees by reference to the printed Calendar that the only resolution on the Calendar are those which were passed over yesterday with one exception. The Chair understands that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] desires to call up the resolution offered by him on a previous day.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island on the 9th of January; which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propose to amend by adding:

Except such governments whose manufactured goods or products were previously restrained or prohibited from free access to our ports.

The purport of the amendment is to recognize the same spirit or doctrine of retaliation which is proposed by the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island. The resolution proposes legislation with the view of striking at governments which prohibit or restrict the introduction of healthful meats from this country. That proposition on the face of it is correct, except that if we insist upon that principle for ourselves we must recognize it in other nations. If we restrict or prohibit the introduction here of the productions of other nations, then it becomes their privilege as well as their right, if the doctrine of this resolution is correct, as I believe it to be, to strike at us and restrict or prohibit the importation into their ports of the productions of this country, even though they may be healthful meats.

This is a matter which affects the producers of the soil throughout all this country. Although it has been represented that the great majority of the productions of this country are used here, yet their price is fixed in foreign countries. England, France, and Germany establish the price of our wheat, of our flour, of our pork, and our beef; and when France states in the spirit of retaliation that there is trichinæ somewhere in American pork it is convenient for them to embarrass the importation of that product into their ports, and so when Germany does the same thing. It is said they retaliate on us in this way because we exclude their products from free access to our ports, and in fact the price of our grain and our meat, not only in the French, German, and English market but in our own market at home, on the seaboard, on the banks of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, is regulated by them.

Without proposing to enter into a discussion of the question of the tariff, about which so much has been said in the discussion of the rules, I offer the amendment merely to recognize the right of other governments to do what we are asserting the power to do. Now in the House and in the Senate resolutions of this kind seem to be offered as a sort of peace-offering——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. LOGAN. Before that is done I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island, to strike out the works "the expediency of" in the second line and insert in lieu thereof the words "and report to the Senate," so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate such legislation as shall enable the Executive to protect our interests against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of healthful meats from the United States.

I ask that the amendment be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendment will be received and printed and lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday will be first stated before the Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois. The unfinished business is the report of the Committee on Rules, revising and rearranging the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. I desire before the Senator from Illinois proceeds with his speech to give notice to the Senate that it is my purpose to-day, if possible, to conclude this matter of the rules after the speech of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a brief time.

Mr. BROWN. I do not wish to be concluded by the notice given by the Senator from Maine. I shall ask the Senate at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois to permit me to occupy the floor for a time on the same subject which he proposes to discuss.

UTAH TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] desires to have considered at this time, for the purpose of submitting remarks, the bill (S. 404) to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the bill the title of which the Chair has stated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the honorable Senate for a brief time, while I submit some remarks on a subject involving a problem in American politics perhaps as difficult to solve as any we shall have to contend with in the near future.

A careful examination of the history of the Mormon Church, or hierarchy, from its organization down to the present day, ought I think to convince every Senator that it is our bounden duty as representatives of the people, and as in part responsible for the perpetuity of our Christian civilization, to take such legislative action as will result in the certain and speedy subjection of the Latter-Day Saints, as they are called, to the laws of the nation.

A rapid review of the history of Mormonism is necessary to a good understanding of the dangers that threaten the country by reason of the lawless spirit and treasonable designs of that organization. In 1820, Joseph Smith, jr., an ignorant youth, thriftless, trifling, and a debauchee, according to history, who lived near Palmyra, N. Y., professed to possess the power of divination, and for many years made use of this pretended power to deceive the ignorant and superstitious, and thereby secure a living.

When he had succeeded in obtaining something of a following by these deceptions, Smith pretended, in 1827, that he had discovered hidden in the earth a "Golden Bible," or the "Book of Mormon," so sacred that certain death would ensue to any who saw it except the prophet himself. It was soon found desirable to modify this declaration, and Smith had a revelation authorizing witnesses.

Ever since that day it has been the practice of this remarkably elastic church organization to make equally radical changes in its doctrines or teachings whenever it became expedient or necessary. "The end justifies the means" has always been its guiding principle.

After the publication of the Book of Mormon, in 1830, a colony of Mormons was established at Kirtland, Ohio, and a systematic organization of the Mormon hierarchy was effected. Smith proclaimed that their possessions at Kirtland were the gift of God and to be the inheritance of the Mormon people forever, but the speedy failure of this prophecy did not shake the confidence of his fanatical followers in the self-styled prophet.

In a little while a conflict began between the citizens around Kirtland and the Mormons, and the prophet found it necessary to move. So he had another revelation, and this time he proclaimed that Independence, Mo., was the land of promise and the place for the city of Zion. Smith and his followers went to Missouri, and history shows a constant warfare with the residents of the locality and with the authorities of the State, which culminated in their expulsion by the power of the State. In 1838 General Clark, who commanded the Missouri militia, sent to Governor Boggs a dispatch in which he arraigned the Mormons as follows:

> There is no crime from treason down to petit larceny but these people, or a majority of them, have been guilty of, all, too, under the counsel of Joseph Smith, jr., the prophet. They have committed treason, murder, arson, burglary, robbery, larceny, and perjury. They have societies formed under the most binding covenants in form and the most horrid oaths to circumvent the laws and put them at defiance, and to plunder and burn and murder and divide the spoils for the use of the Church.

Subsequently Governor Boggs, in a special message to the Missouri Legislature in 1840, referring to the Mormons, used this language:

> These people had violated the laws of the land by open force and avowed resistance to them. They had undertaken, without the aid of the civil authority, to redress their real or fancied grievances. They had instituted among themselves a government of their own, independent of and in opposition to the government of this State. They had at an inclement season of the year driven the inhabitants of an entire county from their homes, ravaged their crops, and destroyed their dwellings. Under these circumstances it became the imperative duty of the executive to interfere and exercise the powers with which he was invested to protect the lives and property of our citizens, to restore order and tranquillity to the country and maintain the supremacy of the laws.

Leaving Missouri under another convenient divine inspiration from Smith, the prophet, these people crossed the river into Illinois, and pitched their tents at Nauvoo. Public sympathy was enlisted in their behalf because of their supposed persecution, and they were welcomed by the people. Missionaries and preachers were again sent out, and in the spring of 1841 Brigham Young shipped from Liverpool over seven hundred proselytes whom he had gathered up in Europe. Nauvoo grew with great rapidity, and Smith proclaimed another revelation to the effect that a great temple should be built there.

In 1843 the first authoritative pronunciamento in favor of polygamy was issued by Smith as a revelation. The Mormon Church flourished. Smith set up at Nauvoo an independent government, hostile to the state, assuming unprecedented powers, and the Nauvoo Legion was increased 4,000 men. Within the city of Nauvoo Joseph Smith was an absolute despot. He was not only the spiritual and temporal head of the Church, but was also mayor of the city, judge of the mayor's court, presiding officer of the council, and commander of the Nauvoo Legion, with a higher rank than was given at that time to any officer in the United States Army.

The municipal court assumed jurisdiction in all cases of arrests made in the city by any process whatsoever, and I believe once or twice released Joe Smith when he had been arrested as a fugitive from justice under warrants issued by the governor of Illinois upon requisition from the governor of Missouri. Not satisfied with even this unwarranted assumption of authority, the council had the audacity to pass an ordinance providing that no writ issued from any place other than Nauvoo for the arrest of any person there should be executed in the city without an approval indorsed thereon by the mayor. It was also provided that if any officer should attempt to make an arrest in the city under any such foreign writ without the mayor's approval of his process he should be subject to imprisonment for life, and that the governor could not pardon him without the consent of the mayor.

These high-handed proceedings were appropriately supplemented by the petition presented to Congress by the Mormons, in which they asked for authority to set up an independent State.

About this time dissensions began to develop among the leaders and bitter hostilities sprang up between the Mormons and the citizens of the surrounding country. The Mormons were charged with stealing property of every description. The cattle of farmers were taken; and it is related that on one occasion, when the officers of the law were reported as coming to Nauvoo in search of stolen property, an order was sent forth to the faithful to assemble at once to hear Brigham Young declare the mysteries of the Kingdom of God. The story is that when the people assembled Young took off his coat, went upon the stand, and said, "Brethren, the mysteries of the Kingdom of God are that ye shall all let down the bars." Those who had stolen cattle understood this hint, the bars were let down, and when the officers of the law came the farmers' cattle were roaming the streets, and no man could be proven guilty of having stolen them.

These difficulties finally culminated in war and the death of Smith the prophet, and Hiram Smith the patriarch, at the hands of a mob.

Governor Ford, in his history of Illinois, states that from the best information he could get he believed that "Smith had the idea of making himself a temporal prince as well as spiritual leader of his people. He caused himself to be crowned and annointed king and priest far above the rest." He further says that the Mormons openly denounced the Government of the United States as utterly corrupt and about to pass away, to be replaced by the government of God, to be administered by his servant Joseph.

The result of the war was that the Mormons left Illinois while writs and prosecutions for property stolen were threatening them, and pitched their tents at Council Bluffs, Iowa, as a resting-place. History says that, though the country around that city was sparsely settled, complaints were soon heard from citizens, who charged the Mormons with stealing their stock and committing other depredations. The Mormons moved on, and the advance column of Latter Day Saints arrived in the valley of Salt Lake in July, 1847.

They soon became a powerful people. Their missionaries and preachers were started in all directions, and visited all parts of the world seeking recruits for the Mormon Church. They have built a beautiful city, erected a great Mormon temple in the city, and also temples in other portions of the Territory, and cultivated the fertile valleys of that great and rich portion of our country; but, Mr. President, there is scarcely a page of their history that is not marred by a recital of some foul deed. The whole history of the Mormon Church abounds in illustrations of the selfishness, deceit, and lawlessness of its leaders and members. Founded in fraud, built up by the most audacious deception, this organization has been notoriously so corrupt and immoral in its practices, teachings, and tendencies as to justify the Governm ent in assuming absolute control of the Territory, and in giving to the Church or its followers no voice in the administration of public affairs.

The progress of Mormonism to its present strength and power has been attended by a continual series of murders, robberies, and outrages of every description; but there is one dark spot in its disgraceful record that can never be effaced, one crime so heinous that the blood of the betrayed victims still calls aloud for vengeance.

Familiar as you all must be with the story of the Mountain Meadow massacre, its details can not be recalled without a shudder of honest indignation at the brutal and barbaric spirit displayed by those who could coolly plan and cruelly perpetrate such an unparalleled butchery. The records of Congress furnish sufficient evidence to prove, as I believe conclusively, that this most atrocious massacre was planned and decreed by the Mormon priesthood, and that several of the leaders personally participated in the horrifying scenes of carnage and bloodshed witnessed in the Mountain Meadow valley on that fateful 9th of September, 1857.

Of that luckless band of one hundred and forty men, women, and children none were left to tell the story of the massacre but seventeen helpless little children from three to seven years old. The savages who for four days assailed those brave pioneers from Arkansas would have been routed had it not been for the assistance of their Mormon allies, who had instigated them to the attack.

These inhuman fanatics, by means of treachery even more despicable than the butchery that followed, proposed a truce, decoyed the immigrants from their barricade, and secured their arms, so that they could be slaughtered without resistance. No adequate punishment was ever meted out to those dastardly murderers. John D. Lee, one of the leaders and chief instigators of the plot, fell out with his fellow priests, was made the scape-goat for their sins, and long afterward was shot for his confessed participation in this massacre. Others equally guilty were allowed to escape, and the Government utterly failed to enforce the atonement which justice demanded for such an unparalleled crime.

My object, Mr. President, in presenting this brief history of the Mormons is to show the spirit that has governed the whole organization from the beginning, and to make it apparent that their religious philosophy is at war with good society and with our institutions of government, and that these people can not safely be permitted to continue the course they have pursued in the past. Their teachings lead to an utter disregard of the Government and its laws and to an utter contempt of the rights of those who do not embrace their religion. They were driven from place to place, not because of their religious belief, but because by their conduct as individuals and as an organization they defied the law and trampled upon the rights of others. They have been at war with good society and with good morals wherever they have secured a foothold. They are to-day building up a government in this Republic which is hostile to the Government of the United States and to our civilization; which, instead of being republican in form and spirit, is essentially at war with republican principles.

Our pioneers who are not Mormons have been oppressed by the power of those arrogant priests. Their teachings in the pulpit and in the press are that the Gentiles, as they are denominated, especially those of this country, are the foes of the Mormon people, and that every device that craft and crime can suggest is justified for their overthrow. By a well-organized system of immigration they are bringing to this country every year thousands of paupers from the Old World, subjects of the Mormon delusion, who are taught by Mormon preachers and teachers to hate this Government. These immigrants know nothing of our institutions except through such misrepresentations as emanate from the Church, and wherever Mormon societies exist the laws of the United States are a dead letter. Their preachers proclaim and their people believe that it is ordained of God that our civilization shall perish and be supplanted by Mormonism. The great mass of the Mormon people accept the declarations of Joe Smith, Brigham Young, and President Taylor as the revealed will of God. Instead of being inspired by the merciful spirit of the Christian religion, they believe that in the hands of God they are instruments to wreak vengeance on our people and destroy the Government.

And this people, Mr. President, animated by such a spirit and governed by such teachings as I have indicated, have from the date of their settlement in Utah steadily increased in numbers, material resources, and influence at a rate that promises to seriously threaten the peace of this country before many years elapse. By means of their system of immigration and by their practice of polygamy their numbers have in the last thirty years increased forty-fold. They have occupied substantially all the valuable lands in Utah, and have secured control of all the water courses of the Territory and of a large portion of Arizona and Idaho.

I understand it to be the fact that there is not one single drop of water in the Territory of Utah in the shape of rivers or lakes or springs that is not to-day owned by the Mormon Church or individuals belonging to it.

Utah now has a population of 170,000, and Salt Lake City of 28,000. There were 3,000 Mormon immigrants last year, and the Territory is rapidly increasing in population and wealth. The Mormons not only completely control Utah, but have sent thousands of their people into the neighboring Territories and States. These colonists vote as a unit under orders from Salt Lake City, and through them the Mormons hold the balance of political power in Arizona and Idaho, and perhaps also in Wyoming, Colorado, and Nevada. If allowed to carry out their designs unchecked they will ere long control at least five or six of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion in Congress from time to time as to the proper course to pursue in regard to these people. Laws have had their place in the statute-books of the nation for many years which have been disregarded and trampled upon with impunity. Under the present organization of the Territory of Utah the Government of the United States has utterly failed to use its own courts to punish the crime of polygamy or to break down the ecclesiastical despotism which rests upon those people.

If I may be pardoned for referring to myself, I desire to say that when I had the honor of being a member of the other branch of the Congress of the United States, and chairman of the Committee on Territories, I took occasion to investigate that question, and for months I labored to secure some sort of legislation which would enable the courts of this country, with judges appointed by the United States sent out there to enforce the laws of the Government, to carry into effect the statute which had been passed by the Congress of the United States against polygamy in the year 1862. The whole thing has been a failure; and up to this hour, notwithstanding that law has been on the statute-book since 1862 and has been decided to be constitutional by the highest court of the country, the effort to enforce it against those who violate it by the practice of polygamy has been an utter failure.

The recent act of Congress creating a commission, while it has I trust done some good yet it is believed to be inadequate to remedy the existing state of affairs. Instead of discouraging polygamy, as was intended by the act, I am told that the practice has considerably increased, and that every Mormon in full fellowship in the Church, whether he has one wife or more, is secretly encouraging the practice in the face of the laws of the Government. The masses of the people are fanatical. They believe in polygamy, and the women are taught that outside of Mormon civilization in this country there is no virtue, that the men are libertines and the women harlots.

It would be a mercy to these misguided people, Mr. President, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to release them from the domination of their priestly enslavers. They should be guaranteed true religious and civil liberty, free schools and a free press, all of which they are deprived of by the priesthood. The so-called Mormon Church should be compelled to take its proper place in society as a law-abiding organization, and its functions should be made purely ecclesiastical. This is all that is asked, but it has been asked of this organization in vain for these many years.

The duty of grappling with this question can not with safety be put aside. Delay is dangerous and a disgrace, and in the end will result in war. We do not want any more war. We do not intend to persecute any class for their opinions or on account of their religion, but the nation can not afford to have its laws trampled upon by any class or organization of people, whether under the garb of religion or under any other pretext.

What shall be done? In my judgment, Mr. President, there is but one thing left for the legislative department of this Government to do, and that is to take away from the people of Utah Territory all political power. Place the legislative power of the Territory in the hands of a legislative council, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and give the council the same powers heretofore given to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory. It is worse than folly for the Government to tinker with this question from year to year, and at the same time leave the whole legal power of the Territory in the hands of men who are defiantly violating national law.

The local legislators are men high in the Church. The judges of the local courts are bishops or other high officers of the Church. Every county officer is a Mormon and Church officer. The schools are taught by Mormons. The municipal corporations are under the control of the Mormon government, and for the purpose of control the settled portions of the Territory are laid off into districts and organized into municipal governments with Mormons as the officers, such municipal corporations taking in large tracts of land, so that it can not be entered or pre-empted by persons not Mormons. The entire machinery for the local government of the Territory is in the hands of Mormons, and they are dictated to by the Church.

The government of the Territory is an ecclesiastical despotism such as should not be allowed to exist in this country. If placing the entire government of these people in the hands of men loyal to the Constitution, the laws, and the institutions of the country, men subject to removal by the President and whose laws shall be subject to the approval of Congress, will not result in producing a better condition of affairs in Utah, I know of no practicable solution of the question.

If the bill which I have had the honor of presenting should become a law, there need be very little difficulty in bringing about the change which would be necessary in the Territory. Such a council would take the place of the local Legislature. The executive department and the Federal judiciary would remain as they are, the local government could be reorganized, and it seems to me that, with the right kind of officers, executive, judicial, and legislative, we would soon be able to see the end of the ecclesiastical despotism now and for thirty years prevailing in that Territory, and the beginning of obedience to the laws of the Government.

I do not wish to be understood as advocating this as a permanent arrangement. I believe that as a general proposition the people of the Territories ought to be intrusted with the control of their local affairs. But this bill is offered, Mr. President, as a remedy for the present deplorable state of affairs in Utah, and as providing the only adequate peaceable means of compelling the Mormons to yield obedience to the laws of the country that I know of.

The sole purpose of the bill which I have presented, and which may need amendment, is to take all political power and control out of the hands of those people because they hold a higher allegiance to their church than to the Republic, and to substitute a legislative council in the stead of the Territorial Legislature now provided by law.

For many years we have been waiting and hoping that the people would put themselves in harmony with the balance of the people of this country, throw off their despotic church government, obey the laws, and become true American citizens.

They are not doing this. They will not do this until they are stripped of political power and until the despotic rule of the priesthood over those benighted people is broken, and therefore I say in the language of Judge McBride, of that Territory:

> Let the Government take the management into its own hands, discharge the incompetent and treasonable agents who have for thirty years made Utah a reproach and a hissing among men, and purge out of its civil code every vestige of that ecclesiastical taint from which it has suffered for a generation. Justice to the priest-ridden people of Utah; humanity to her rising generation, destined to be slaves of a cunning and remorseless theocracy or free citizens of a redeemed commonwealth; protection to the brave and patriotic non-Mormons who have watched and waited for the dawn of freedom while her light seemed but a spark in the wilderness, call upon the nation to act without delay.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to discuss for a moment the power of Congress to pass such a law. It has been intimated that we have not the power under the Constitution to pass an act taking from the people the power of local government and placing it in the hands of a council appointed by the President. The Constitution gave to Congress the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories and all other property of the United States.

Whatever power Congress has in the premises is derived from this provision and as a necessary power to govern what it has acquired.

Story says in his work on the Constitution, in book 3, chapter 31, page 227, that—

> As the General Government possesses the right to acquire territory either by conquest or by treaty, it would seem to follow as an inevitable consequence that it possesses the power to govern what it has acquired. The territory does not when so acquired become entitled to self-government, and it is not subject to the jurisdiction of any State; it must consequently be under the dominion and jurisdiction of the Union, or it would be without any government at all.

Again, on page 228 of the same volume, he says:

What shall be the form of government established in the Territories depends exclusively upon Congress. Having a right to erect a Territorial government, they may confer upon it such powers, legislative, judicial, and executive, as they may deem best.

Referring to Kent's Commentaries, volume 1, page 414, we find the following:

With respect to the vast Territories belonging to the United States Congress have assumed to exercise over them supreme power of sovereignty. Exclusive and unlimited power of legislation is given to Congress by the Constitution and sanctioned by judicial decisions.

The same writer, after referring to the regulations made for the government of the District of Columbia and the Territories northwest of the Ohio River, continued as follows:

It would seem from these various Congressional regulations of the Territories belonging to the United States, that Congress has supreme power in the government of them, depending on the exercise of their sound discretion. * * * All admit, said Chief Justice Marshall, the constitutionality of a Territorial government. But neither the District of Columbia nor a Territory is a State within the meaning of the Constitution, or entitled to claim the privileges secured to the members of the Union. This has been so adjudged by the Supreme Court.

In 19 Howard, in the famous case of Dred Scott, Justice Taney, in speaking of the acquisition of territory, says:

It is acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony, and be governed by Congress with absolute authority, and as the propriety of admitting a new State is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a State on an equal footing with the other States, must rest upon the same discretion.

Again:

In some cases government consisting of persons appointed by the Federal Government would best subserve the interests of the Territory when the inhabitants were few and scattered and new to one another. In other instances it would be more advisable to commit the powers of self-government to the people who had settled in the Territory, as being most competent to determine what was best for their own interests. What is the best form must always depend upon the condition of the Territory at the time, and the choice of the mode must depend upon the exercise of a discretionary power by Congress, acting within the scope of its constitutional authority.

Again:

The form of government to be established necessarily rested in the discretion of Congress.

I might cite many cases where the court has used language of like tenor and meaning, showing that the whole matter was in the sound discretion of Congress; but, Mr. President, what has been the action of Congress itself in regard to territory belonging to the United States? We find that Congress, by an act approved October 30, 1803, authorized President Jefferson to take possession of and occupy the territory ceded by France to the United States in that year by the treaty concluded at Paris.

In that act it was provided that until the expiration of that session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories should be sooner made by Congress, all the powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the ceded Territories should be vested in such persons and be exercised in such manner as the President might direct; and when the act providing for the temporary government of the two Territories was subsequently passed at the same session, it continued this authority in the President until October 1 following. Thus it appears that these early fathers, who had every opportunity for fully understanding the powers of Congress under the Constitution, did not hesitate to place the entire control of these new Territories in the hands of the President as a temporary expedient.

And I find that by the act of March 26, 1804, erecting Louisiana into two Territories and providing for the temporary government thereof, the legislative power was vested in the governor, and in thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons of the Territory, to be called the legislative council, and who were to be appointed annually by the President.

If it should be claimed, in the face of these precedents and authorities, that Congress can not take away from the people of Utah the government it has given them, it will perhaps only be necessary to refer to the case of the District of Columbia, in which the right of suffrage was revoked and a government by commissioners established, or to the provisional governments set up in the Southern States during the period of reconstruction.

If the people of Utah were loyal to the Government of the United States and were yielding obedience to the laws, I would be among the last members of this honorable Senate to insist upon placing over them a government not of their own; but they occupy to-day the position of defying the Government, of trampling the laws of Congress under their feet, and that being so, it seems to me it can not be doubted that Congress, so far as it has anything to do with the subject, has the right to strip them of every vestige of political power, and put all power there into the hands of whomsoever the Government of the United States sees proper to intrust with the functions necessary to be exercised.

Now, Mr. President, without delaying the Senate any longer, and thanking its members for their attention, I shall yield the floor. I believe my friend from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] desires to make some remarks upon the question, and I will therefore delay the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories for the time being.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose at present to follow the example of the Senator from Illinois, and discuss the social question connected with the affairs of Utah or its church polity. At a future period in the debate, when the bill introduced by the honorable Senator from Vermont is taken up for consideration, I may give some attention to that question, and I may contrast practices of the social evil in Utah and other sections of the Union. And while I have certainly no justification for these evil practices in any part of the Union, I shall be disposed, as far as we have the power, to apply the same remedies for the extirpation of the same evil in different sections. And I shall not draw distinctions between crimes against the family and the State, identical in their character, because they are practiced under different names. My purpose at present is to place upon the record, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Illinois, an argument in which I shall attempt to show the unconstitutionality of the recent legislation already had in connection with Utah affairs, and the indefensible character of the legislation proposed.

As the Senator from Illinois has not been interrupted during the delivery of his remarks, and as I desire to discuss a constitutional question of importance, I respectfully request of Senators that the thread of my argument may not be broken by questions propounded during its delivery. After I have concluded the remarks I desire to make, I will then very cheerfully respond to any questions in connection with the argument which any Senator may desire to propound.

On a former occasion, when the bill known as the Edmunds bill, in reference to affairs in Utah, was before the Senate, I took occasion to express my abhorrence of the practice of polygamy, and to deprecate and denounce it. We now have pending before the Senate a bill to amend the provisions of that act and enlarge the scope of authority given by it. I desire to see the bill amended so as to meet any reasonable expectation that the country may have on this subject if it can be done without a palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States, which every Senator in this Chamber has taken a solemn oath to support.

When the original bill was pending before the Senate, I had not carefully investigated the whole question, and did not enter at length into the constitutional argument. But further reflection has satisfied my mind beyond a reasonable doubt that the eighth section of the act is a palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States, and is therefore null and void; and that the Utah commission, which is acting under that unconstitutional statute and prescribing test-oaths to voters, however amiable and accomplished they may be as gentlemen, are acting without authority of law; and that every act performed by them under said eighth section is without law, and every infringement of personal liberty or private rights is an unjustifiable and indefensible usurpation of power.

The eighth section of the act, which is the essence of it, is in these words:

No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible to election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any office, or place of public trust, honor or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Now, I shall undertake to show that this section as administered violates at least a half a dozen provisions of the Constitution of the United States. If I succeed in showing that it violates a single provision, of course every lawyer must admit that it is a nullity.

I shall undertake to show, Mr. President, that it is a palpable violation of the following provisions of the Constitution, which I shall quote and then make my comments:

First. "Nor shall any person be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

Second. "No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury."

Third. "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State or district wherein the crime shall have been committed."

Fourth. "He shall be confronted with the witnesses against him."

Fifth. "He shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor."

Sixth. "He shall have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

Seventh. "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

Eighth. "No bill of attainder shall be passed."

Ninth. "No ex post facto law shall be passed."

Now, Mr. President, I propose to examine these different provisions, and to show that this act as administered by the commission violates every one of them.

First, the Constitution declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

It is solemnly declared in the great charter of English liberty that—

No freeman shall be taken, imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold or liberties, or free customs, or be outlawed, or exiled, or otherwise destroyed or condemned, but by lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

Judge Blackstone says of this provision in the great charter that it protected every individual of the nation in the free enjoyment of his life, his liberty, and his property, unless declared to be forfeited by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land. (Com., volume 4, page 424.)

Again, in volume 1, page 139, he says:

And by a variety of ancient statutes it is enacted that no man's lands or goods shall be seized into the king's hands against the great charter and the law of the land; and that no man shall be disinherited, nor put out of franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and be forejudged by course of law; and if anything be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed and holden for none.

Vattel, in his standard work upon the law of nations, page 33, while treating of the principal objects of good government, says:

The society is established with a view of procuring to those who are its members the necessaries, conveniences, and even pleasures of life, and in general everything necessary to their happiness—of enabling each individual peaceably to enjoy his own property, and to obtain justice with safety and certainty.

Now, Mr. President, I beg you to bear in mind that the Constitution not only guarantees protection to life and to liberty, but it also guarantees like protection to the property of every citizen of the United States. The eighth section of the Edmunds act as administered denies to every Mormon who is a citizen of a Territory of the United States the right to hold office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument unless he takes a certain oath prescribed by the commissioners. The Constitution of the United States guarantees to every such citizen protection of his property, which shall not be taken from him without due process of law. It becomes necessary, then, to inquire whether an officer has a property in his office. If so, he is protected in the enjoyment of it by the Constitution, and it can not be taken from him without due process of law. "An officer is one who is legally invested with an office" (1 Bacon's Abridgment, 279). Now, you will please bear in mind that the eighth section of the Edmunds act as administered denies to any one refusing to take the test oath prescribed by the commission the right to hold office. What is an office? Judge Blackstone, in his Commentaries, says:

Offices, which are a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereto belonging, are also incorporeal hereditaments, whether public, as those of magistrates, or private, as of bailiffs, receivers, and the like. For a man may have an estate in them either to himself and his heirs, or for life, or for a term of years, or for during pleasure only.—Blackstone's Commentaries, 36.

By these quotations it appears that a man may have an estate in an office. What is the meaning of the word "estate?"

In its most extensive sense it is applied to signify everything of which riches or fortune may consist, and includes personal and real property.—Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 516.

Having established by authorities which will not, I presume, be questioned that an officer has a property in his office, and having shown that the Constitution of the United States expressly declares that he shall not be deprived of that property without due process of law, it becomes necessary to inquire whether the eighth section of the law known as the Edmunds act, which, as executed by the commission, deprives a Mormon of his property in his office and of his right to hold any place of public trust, honor, or emolument if he refuses to take a certain test-oath prescribed, takes his property by due process of law or without law.

The case of Huber vs. Reily, reported in the third volume of P. F. Smith's Pennsylvania Reports, in which the able opinion of the court was delivered by Judge Strong, was very similar to that under consideration.

By the act of Congress passed 30th March, 1865, all persons drafted for military service who did not report on notice were declared to be deserters. And, in addition to other lawful penalties for the crime of desertion, all persons who committed it were declared to have forfeited their rights of citizenship and their right to become citizens, and were declared incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States. The plaintiff Huber was returned by the provost-marshal as a deserter.

It is admitted that he was a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania and entitled to vote at the precinct where he tendered his vote, if the disqualification did not render him ineligible. He tendered the vote, and it was rejected by the managers of the election on the ground that he was a deserter, as shown by the registry of the provost-marshal of the district. He brought suit against the manager of the election for refusing to permit him to vote. Upon this statement of facts a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff in the court below, and error was assigned. And the court above affirmed the judgment, on the ground that the plaintiff had not been convicted of desertion by any court-martial or any court of competent jurisdiction having the authority to render a final judgment in the case, and that the penalty could not attach, nor could he be disfranchised without due process of law. As already stated, the case is very much like the one now under consideration.

In each case the managers of the election declared the voter ineligible on account of the commission of a crime of which he had not been convicted, the only difference being that in the Utah case the voter was required to swear that he had not committed the crime, and on his failure to make the oath was disfranchised, while in the case decided by Judge Strong the fact of desertion appeared on the records in the provost-marshal's office, and upon that the managers of the election held that he was guilty, and rejected the vote. In neither case was there any trial by a competent tribunal, nor any judgment of conviction rendered by any court of competent jurisdiction.

I shall read a few sentences from the able opinion delivered by Judge Strong in this case. On page 117 he says:

But I can call to mind no instance in which it has been held that the ascertainment of guilt of a public offense and the imposition of legal penalties can be in any other mode than by trial according to the law of the land or due process of law. That is the law of the particular case administered by the judicial tribunal authorized to adjudicate upon it.

And I can not persuade myself that a judge of elections or a board of election officers, constituted under State laws, is such a tribunal. I can not think they have power to try criminal offenders, still less to adjudge the guilt or innocence of an alleged violator of the laws of the United States. A trial before such officers is not due process of law for the punishment of offenses according to the meaning of that phrase in the Constitution. There are, it is true, many things which they may determine, such as age and residence of a person offering to vote, whether he has paid taxes, and whether, if born an alien, he has a certificate of naturalization. These things pertain to the ascertainment of a political right.

But whether he has been guilty of a criminal offense, and as a consequence forfeited his right, is an inquiry of a different character. Neither our Constitution nor our law has conferred upon the judges of elections any such judicial functions. They are not sworn to try issues in criminal cases. They have no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and their judgment, if rendered, would be binding upon no other tribunal.

* * * * * * *

Surely that is no trial by due process of law, the judgment in which is not final, decides nothing, but leaves the accused exposed to another trial in a different tribunal, and to the imposition by that other tribunal of the full punishment prescribed by law.

Again, on page 121, the learned judge says:

It may be added that this construction is not only required by the universally admitted rules of statutory interpretation, but it is in harmony with the personal rights secured by the Constitution, and which Congress must be presumed to have kept in view. It gives to the accused a trial before sworn judges, a right to challenge, an opportunity of defense, the privilege of hearing the witnesses against him, and of calling witnesses in his behalf. It preserves to him the common-law presumption of innocence until he has been adjudged guilty according to the forms of law. It gives finality to a single trial. If tried by a court-martial and acquitted, his innocence can never again be called in question and he can be made to suffer no part of the penalties prescribed for guilt. On the other hand, if the record of conviction by a lawful court be not a prerequisite to suffering the penalty of the law, the act of Congress may work intolerable hardships. The accused may then be obliged to prove his innocence whenever the registry of the provost-marshal is adduced against him. No decision of the board of election officers will protect him against the necessity of renewing his defense at every subsequent election, and each time with increased difficulty, arising from the possible death or absence of witnesses. In many cases this may prove a gross wrong.

* * * * * * *

To hold that the act of Congress imposes upon such the necessity of proving their innocence without conviction of guilt would be an unreasonable construction of the act, and would be attributing to the National Legislature an intention not warranted by the language and connection of the enactment. It follows that the judgment of the court below upon the case stated was right. The plaintiff, not having been convicted of desertion and failure to return to the service or to report to a provost-marshal, and not having been sentenced to the penalties and forfeitures of the law, was entitled to vote.

Chief-Justice Woodward concurred in the judgment of the court, and added:

But I do not concur in treating the act of Congress as a valid enactment, for I believe it to be an ex post facto law in respect to all soldiers except such as commit the crime of desertion after the date of the law. This is not a case of desertion subsequent to the enactment but prior to it, and the penalties of the offense were such as were fixed by law when the offense was committed, and it is not competent for the Legislature to increase them except for future cases.

And I will add in this connection, Mr. President, that it is not competent for Congress to punish citizens of a Territory, or to add new penalties for polygamy committed before the passage of the Edmunds act, or to disfranchise any citizen of a Territory for crimes committed prior to the passage of the act of disfranchisement.

In Dorsey's case (7 Porter's Alabama Reports) Judge Ormond refers to the constitutional provision that the crime or offense must be ascertained by due course of law, and says the term "due course of law" has a settled and ascertained meaning, and was intended to protect people against privations of their lives, liberty, or property in any other mode than through the intervention of the judicial tribunals of the country. But this law seeks to ascertain a fact exalted into a crime and punished in a particular manner—not by the judgment of a competent court, but by the admission of the offender, and construing his silence as evidence of guilt.

In the case of Greene vs. Biggs (1 Curtis' Circuit Court Reports 325), Judge Curtis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, presiding in the circuit court, defines what is meant by the law of the land. He says:

Certainly this does not mean any act which the Assembly may choose to pass. If it did, the legislative will could inflict a forfeiture of life, liberty, or property without a trial. The exposition of the words as they stand in Magna Charta, as well as in the American Constitution, has been that they require "due process of law," and in this is necessarily implied and included the right to answer to and contest the charge, and the consequent right to be discharged from it unless it is proved.

Lord Coke, in giving an interpretation of these words in Magna Charta (2 Inst., 50, 51), says they mean "due process of law," in which is included presentment or indictment and being brought in to answer thereto. And the jurists of our country have not relaxed this interpretation. "It follows," says he, speaking of the case before him, "that a law which would preclude the accused from answering to and contesting the charge, * * * and which should condemn him to fine and forfeiture unheard if he failed to comply with the requisition, would deprive him of his liberty or property, not by the law of the land, but by an arbitrary and unconstitutional exertion of legislative power.

I might add other weighty authorities as to the meaning of "due process of law," but I deem it unnecessary. Those already produced show conclusively that the test-oath prescribed by the commissioners under the Edmunds act is not "due process of law" and that it deprives the citizen of Utah of his property in his office without due process of law and without law. It simply prescribes a test-oath which he is required to take, and if he refuses to do so his guilt is conclusively presumed, and his property is taken from him without giving him an opportunity to contest the truth of the charge and without requiring proof of it.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the test-oath prescribed for lawyers and in the case of the Missouri test-oath have conclusively settled this question, that the application of a test-oath or the requirement that the party take the oath before he can exercise certain constitutional rights or before he can have the benefit of his office, is unconstitutional and of no effect. If the requirement that a lawyer take a test-oath that he has not committed a certain crime before he can practice law is not due process of law and the law requiring it is void, and that a test-oath, as in the Missouri case, requiring a minister of the Gospel to swear that he has not committed a particular crime before he can discharge the sacred functions of his position, is not due process of law, and the law requiring it is null and void, as the Supreme Court has decided it is, then I should like to hear some lawyer draw a distinction between them and the test-oath applied to the citizen of a Territory, requiring him to swear that he has not committed a particular crime before he can discharge the duties of his office.

If the law which denies to a lawyer, who has a property in his profession, the right to practice till he takes a test-oath, and if the law which deprives a minister of the Gospel of the right to discharge the duties of his office until he takes a test-oath, are unconstitutional, how can a law which requires a citizen of a Territory to swear that he has not committed a particular crime before he can discharge the duties of his office be constitutional and valid? There can be no legal distinction drawn between the cases; if one is a nullity they are all three nullities. In two of the cases the Supreme Court of the United States has expressly ruled that they are nullities.

So much for the first objection to the constitutionality of this act.

I will now proceed to consider in more concise form some of the other objections. For convenience, and as they are intimately connected, I will consider together the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth.

As a statute of the Congress of the United States makes bigamy a crime in the Territories and punishes it by imprisonment in the penitentiary, I suppose it will not be questioned by those who have a most laudable zeal for its suppression that it is an infamous crime.

The second constitutional objection above made is that no one shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime without indictment or presentment of a grand jury. The polygamist in Utah is held to answer before a commission appointed under the Edmunds act, which tenders to him a test-oath, requiring him to swear that he is not a bigamist or polygamist, and, as construed by the commission, that he has not at any time been guilty of the offense; and if he refuses to take the oath guilt is conclusively presumed, and the punishment, that he shall neither vote nor hold office, is inflicted upon him. In other words, he is convicted or conclusively presumed to be guilty by a commission acting as court, jury, and executioner, and deprived of his right to vote and of his property in his office without due process of law and without indictment or presentment of a grand jury.

I hold therefore that the second objection is well taken and the provision of the Constitution therein referred to is palpably violated.

The third objection is that the act violates that provision of the Constitution which requires a speedy and a public trial by an impartial jury. The Constitution provides in such case, first, that the accused shall be indicted by a grand jury and then that he shall be speedily and publicly tried by jury. For this constitutional requirement, which guarantees to him a speedy and public trial by jury, the commission under the Edmunds act tenders to him a test-oath and requires him to swear that he has not committed a crime; and if he refuses to do it guilt is conclusively presumed, and the sentence is passed by the officer controlling the elections or by the commission, which denies to him his right to vote or to hold his office. This proceeding therefore violates that portion of the Constitution referred to in my third objection.

My fourth objection is that the Constitution requires in each criminal case that the accused shall be confronted with the witnesses against him. The omnipotent commission, acting under the Edmunds act, requires that he shall take a test-oath that he did not commit the crime, and if he refuses to do it he shall be confronted with no witnesses, but by the executioner, who executes the sentence of the law by driving him from the polls, confiscating his property in his office if he has one, or refusing to permit him to vote or hold an office. The act is therefore a palpable violation of this provision of the Constitution.

My fifth objection is that the act violates that provision of the Constitution which guarantees to him compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. This bill permits him to introduce no witness in his favor. The trial is had without witnesses in his favor, and it matters not whether he committed the crime or whether he is the most innocent man in the Territory. It matters not that he might be able to prove by a hundred witnesses that he never committed the offense. The statute allows him no compulsory process to bring one of them before a court or the commission that has assumed jurisdiction in his case. But his simple refusal to take the test oath prescribed is held to be his conviction, and no witness is permitted in his favor and no appeal is provided to any other tribunal. Then the Edmunds act violates this provision of the Constitution also.

My sixth objection is that it violates that provision of the Constitution which guarantees to the citizen who is accused of a crime the assistance of counsel for his defense. As it provides for no indictment by a grand jury and no speedy and public trial by a traverse jury, as it permits him to be confronted by no witness against him and denies him compulsory process to bring in the witnesses in his favor, it follows as a necessary consequence that in the case of the trial, if we may call such a mockery of justice a trial, it denies to him the assistance of counsel for his defense, and is therefore violative of the fundamental law of the land.

The charge of bigamy is a criminal charge, and is punishable by law. The commissioners under the Edmunds act undertake to ascertain the guilt or innocence of the accused by means of a test-oath, and if the party answers that he has been guilty of the offense, or refuses to answer, punishment is inflicted upon him for the offense. In the Missouri test-oath case before the Supreme Court it was claimed by counsel for the State that the oath was a qualification for holding office and practicing certain professions, &c. But the court say it has been made an instrument for the infliction of punishment, which could not rightfully be done. (4 Wallace, 319.) Again, on pages 320 and 321, the court says: "The deprivation of any right may be punishment; disqualification from the pursuit of a legal profession or from positions of trust is punishment." The court says the oath was punishment.

Having shown that the crime at which the Edmunds act is aimed is an infamous one, and that the eighth section of that act denies to any Mormon who has been guilty of it the right to vote or to hold office and takes his property without due process of law and without providing for any legal trial, I now call attention to the additional fact that it violates the seventh provision of the Constitution, referred to in my objections, which says: "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." This is a criminal case, or rather it is a proceeding to punish citizens of the United States for the crime of bigamy by depriving them of their vote or the right to vote or hold office. How does the commission propose to do this? It does it by compelling the party to be a witness against himself, to testify whether he has or has not been guilty of the crime. And if he refuses to testify it draws from the refusal the conclusion of his guilt. What right has the Congress of the United States or any commission acting under it to impose any such test-oath? What right has it to pass any law compelling the party to testify whether he has been guilty or not guilty of the offense?

Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere is the well-established rule of the common law, and is thus explained by a very able and accurate American authority: that when the answer will have a tendency to expose the witness to penal liability, or to any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge, or to a forfeiture of his estate, the witness is not bound to answer. And if the fact to which he is interrogated forms but one link in the chain of testimony which is to convict him, he is protected. And if the witness declines to answer, no inference of the truth of the fact is permitted to be drawn from that circumstance. (1 Greenleaf's Evidence, secs. 451–453.)

I hold, therefore, that the eighth section of the Edmunds act as administered is a palpable violation of the constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case. The able and accurate authority above quoted seems to put this question beyond doubt. No one shall be held to answer if the answer will have a tendency to expose him to penal liability, or to any kind of punishment (and the Supreme Court has held that the oath itself is punishment), or to a criminal charge, or to a forfeiture of his estate; and no inference of the truth of the charge is permitted to be drawn from his refusal to answer. The Edmunds act as executed requires him to answer on oath when the answer, if in the affirmative, will expose him to penal liability, will expose him, in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, to punishment, and to the forfeiture of his estate in his office, if he holds one. The act is, therefore, plainly and palpably in conflict with the provision of the Constitution last referred to.

In 4 Devereux's North Carolina Reports it is held that "a public office is the subject of property, as everything corporeal or incorporeal from which a man can earn a livelihood and make gain. The office is created for a public purpose, but it is conferred on a particular man and accepted by him as a source of individual emolument, and to the extent of that emolument it is private property as much as the lands he tills, or the horse he rides, or a debt that is owing to him."

And in 2 Alabama Reports, N. S., page 31, the chief-justice says:

An office is as much a species of property as anything else capable of being held or owned; and to deprive one of it or unjustly withhold it is an injury which the law can redress in a manner as ample as it can any other wrong.

Again he says, page 34:

We need not cite authorities to prove that by the common law no one can be deprived of the right to exercise or hold a civil office but by the judgment of his peers, as we have already shown that an office is a species of property.

An office is an estate, which may be for life, or for a term of years, or during pleasure. That estate is property, and the Constitution of the United States says no one shall be deprived of property without due process of law.

It matters not whether it is attempted to be done by means of a test-oath, compelling a party to criminate himself, or in whatever imaginable form other than by due process of law, it is null and void, whatever may be the means resorted to for its accomplishment. What power, then, has Congress to deprive any man of his property in his office simply because he refuses to swear whether he has or has not violated the criminal law of the land, when he has neither been charged with, indicted, nor convicted of any such violation? I deny that it has any such right. This attempt is in violation of the fundamental law as expounded by the highest authorities, and is absurd within itself; and I know of no rule governing courts which could justify them in the enforcement of any such enactment. The statute is a nullity, and must, in my opinion, be so held whenever and wherever it is brought in question before any intelligent court.

In support of the position that a statute prescribing a test-oath which deprives a citizen of his right to hold office is a penal one I refer the Senate to the case of Leigh (1 Munford's Virginia Reports) and the case of Dorsey (7 Porter's Alabama Reports). Each of these States had passed stringent acts against dueling, and had prescribed an oath to be taken in Virginia by all officers of the State government and in Alabama by all State officers and practicing attorneys that each had not before engaged in a duel and would never engage in one while he remained in the office. In each case the applicant moved to be admitted to the bar of the supreme court without taking the oath, and in each case the court sustained the motion The decisions are lengthy, but as they are very able I shall not apologize for reading portions of them to the Senate. And upon the point to which I last referred I invite the attention of the Senate especially to the following language of the judges:

In Leigh's case (page 482) Judge Roane, who was greatly distinguished for his ability, says:

However laudable the object of the act to suppress dueling may be, it is still a highly penal law, and must be construed strictly. It is unusually penal, if not tyrannical, in compelling a person to stipulate upon oath, by the third section, not only in relation to his past conduct and present resolution, but also for the future state of his mind. Thus premising that this act is highly and unusually penal I will, under the influence of the rules for construing penal statutes, proceed to apply it to the case before us.

Judge Fleming in the same case says:

The act under consideration being a compulsory law (however salutary it may be), imposing on the officers of the Government an oath unknown to the former law of the State or of the United States, though there be no pecuniary penalty inflicted on those who refused to take the oath therein prescribed, I can not but consider it as a penal statute, and as such must give it a strict interpretation.

Again he says:

Admitting that attorneys are comprehended in the act, it has or ought to have a prospective and not retrospective operation, and can not affect officers of any description appointed to office prior to the passage of the act.

In Dorsey's case (7 Porter, 366) Judge Goldthwaite says:

I have omitted any argument to show that disqualification from office or from the pursuit of a lawful avocation is a punishment. That it is so is too evident to require any illustration; indeed it may be questioned whether any ingenuity could devise any penalty which would operate more forcibly on society.

Again he says:

A citizen is informed that by the laws of the State he is entitled to aspire to any office or pursue any other avocation which any other citizen can. Yet when he is about to enter in the office or avocation he is required to swear to his innocence of a particular crime; it then becomes evident that if he can not truly take the oath required he is excluded. Can it be doubted that for all the purposes of the disqualification the guilt of the individual is ascertained? In what does it differ from the general enactment that a candidate for office shall be required to prove and establish his innocence of a specified crime? Admitting a person to be guilty, he is neither accused, tried, nor convicted by any tribunal known to the laws; yet he is punished with unerring certainty and the utmost celerity; his conscience is made his sole accuser and judge; his punishment commences with the commission of the crime, and terminates only when he ceases to exist; he is excluded from the sympathy of his peers; no legal doubt can intervene to produce his acquittal; an error of his judgment involves his soul in the awful guilt of perjury or punishes him without guilt. I have no hesitation in declaring that this act provides a mode of ascertaining and punishing guilt which is not only unwarranted by the constitution, but is also in direct contravention of several of the most important provisions of the declaration of rights, by which the liberties and privileges of the citizens are guarded. * * * When once it is admitted or proved that a citizen has a right to aspire to office, or to pursue any lawful avocation, it seems to me impossible that he can be legally deprived of that right by a punishment for an offense committed without a trial by jury; and I can perceive no sound distinction between a law which deprives one of his right without a trial and that which ascertains and punishes his guilt by an illegal mode of trial.

He then refers to the governor's right to grant pardons, and says:

We can not presume that the General Assembly intended by this act to interfere with the constitutional prerogative of mercy vested in the executive, yet this act, if constitutional, imposes a penalty which can not be remitted and inflicts a punishment beyond the reach of executive clemency.

In the same case Judge Ormond (says page 379):

This is a highly penal law; it excludes, unless its terms are complied with, all persons from practicing as attorneys and counselors at law in the courts of this State. It must, therefore, receive a strict construction, in accordance with well-established principles, and the authority to pass it be clearly and fairly discoverable from the Constitution.

And on page 38:

It is so offensive to the first principles of justice to require a man to give evidence against himself in a penal case, that, independent of the constitutional interdict no one in this enlightened age will be found to advocate the principle.

But it may be said this is not a case of this kind, as no corporal or pecuniary punishment is the consequence of a refusal to take the oath against dueling. But are not the results the same whether punishment follows from the admission or is imposed as a consequence of silence? Can ingenuity make a distinction between a punishment inflicted in this mode, as a consequence of a refusal to take the oath, by closing one of the avenues to wealth and fame, and a positive pecuniary mulct? If there is a difference, I think it entirely in favor of the latter, so far as the amount or weight of the penalty could affect the decision of the case.

On page 381:

With great deference to the opinion of others who may differ from me, I think that the requisition by the Legislature, in substance and effect, requires the applicant for a license to give evidence against himself, and that, if not within the letter, is at least within the words, of the prohibition, the very foundation of which is that every one is presumed to be innocent till the contrary appears.

Judge Pitman, in the same case, refers to the fact that the statute under consideration rendered any one engaged in selling spirituous liquors an incompetent juror, and authorized the question to be propounded to him, and says:

This law authorizes the court to inquire of the juror who may be challenged on this account. It is true the law says, "He may decline to answer;" but what then? Is the fact to be proved by other evidence? No; this silence is considered as sufficient proof, and he is excluded accordingly. He is therefore compelled to answer, if he does not wish to be excluded as unworthy to sit as a juror or does not wish to be considered as concerned in a traffic which may be considered as infamous. The maxim of the common law recognized by the Constitution is that every man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty. The whole spirit of this law appears to me to be at variance with the rights of property as well as person. The Legislature has no right by an act to confiscate the property of the citizen.

Now, Mr. President, I beg the Senate to bear in mind that the two cases just referred to were precisely similar to the case now under consideration. The statutes of Alabama and of Virginia were aimed against dueling, just as the Edmunds act is aimed against bigamy. The means resorted to for the suppression of the vice and the punishment of the offender were the same in each case, a test-oath, which attorneys at law in the one case and officers of the State in the other were required to take, swearing that they had not and would not engage in a duel, &c. In the case before the Senate a like test-oath is applied to a citizen of Utah, requiring him to swear that he is not a bigamist or a polygamist; and the commission appointed under the act requires his oath to cover all his past life. If he has ever at any time been guilty, though it may have been before the passage of the act by Congress making bigamy a crime in Utah, or if the case occurred since the passage of the law, though it may have long since been barred by the statute of limitations, still he is required to swear that he never committed the act, or he is driven from the polls and denied the right to hold office.

As already stated, the Supreme Court of the United States held the lawyer's test-oath to be unconstitutional; they also held the Missouri test-oath, which applied to ministers of the Gospel and other officers, unconstitutional. The supreme court of Virginia held the dueling test-oath unconstitutional, and the supreme court of Alabama held a like test-oath unconstitutional; and I apprehend there is no United States court nor is there any respectable court of any State in the Union that would hold the Edmunds act as construed by the commission constitutional. If the test-oath in four similar cases was unconstitutional and was so adjudged by courts of the highest authority, how can the Edmunds act, similar in all its objects and aims, be held constitutional by any good lawyer, by any competent court, by Congress, or by the country?

But I must notice the two remaining constitutional objections. The Constitution of the United States denies to Congress the power to pass any bill of attainder. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the acts of Congress prescribing the test-oaths above mentioned were bills of pains and penalties in the nature of a bill of attainder, and as such inhibited by the Constitution. What is a bill of attainder? A bill of attainder, as I understand it, is a judicial sentence by Parliament or by Congress; in other words, it is a legislative usurpation of judicial power, as when Parliament passed a bill to attaint A B of high treason, and directed his execution and the confiscation of his estate. This act is in the nature of a bill of attainder. It does not attaint the Mormon who refuses to take the test-oath of high treason, but it does assume judicial functions, and confiscate his property in his office without judicial trial or the judgment of any court. It usurps the power that properly belongs to the courts alone of determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused.

I may be told that the British Parliament centuries ago enacted test-oaths, and that no man was allowed to hold office until he had taken the sacraments of the Church of England and the oaths of abjuration, &c. This is true; and it is also true that the enlightenment of the age and the triumph of reason have long since swept these oaths from the statute-book, and the Jew and the dissenter sit to-day by the side of the churchman in the Parliament of the realm.

But it does not follow from this historical fact that Congress now has or ever did possess any such powers. The Parliament of Great Britain has established a particular Church. Has the Congress of the United States any such power? Parliament has established an aristocracy and provided for the grant by the king of titles of nobility. Can Congress do the same? Certainly not. Why not? Because there is a written constitution in this country which expressly forbids it. There was none in England. Such is the omnipotence of the Parliament of Great Britain that, with the consent of the king, it may change what they call the constitution at pleasure. The Congress of the United States, with the President, has no such power. The Parliament of Great Britain has power to confiscate the property of the subject beyond the period of his life, and either with or without the use of test-oaths, if it should so will, to deprive a subject of his property without due process of law. The written Constitution of the United States, which it has no power to change, denies to Congress the power to do either. From the difference in the powers possessed by Parliament and by Congress the Senate will readily perceive the reason why the British test-oaths can as precedents be of no avail to the advocates of similar oaths in this country.

There is, therefore, no escape, Mr. President, from the position that the eighth section of the act in question is a bill of pains and penalties in the nature of a bill of attainder, the passage of which is expressly forbidden by the Constitution of the United States. My ninth objection is that it is an ex post facto law.

What is an ex post facto law? It is thus defined by Mr. Justice Chase, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Calder and Wife vs. Bull and Wife, (3 Dallas, 386):

1. Every law that makes an action, done before the passing of the laws, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action.
2. Every law that aggravates a crime or makes it greater than it was when committed.
3. Every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed.
4. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offenders.

(See also 1 Kent's Com., 408; Sergeant on Const. Law, 356; Smith's Com. on Const. Construction, 372.)

In Fletcher vs. Peck (6 Cranch's Reports, 138) Chief-Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, says:

An ex post facto law is one which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed. Such a law may inflict penalties on the person or may inflict pecuniary penalties which swell the public Treasury. The Legislature is prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate, or any part of it, shall be seized for a crime which was not declared by some previous law to render him liable to that punishment.

In the case of Ross (2 Pick., 169) it was held that if a statute add a new punishment, or increase the old one, for an offense committed before its passage, such an act would be ex post facto. The party ought to know, says the court, at the time of committing the offense, the whole extent of the punishment.

Will it be questioned by any one that the disfranchisement practiced in Utah under the Edmunds act is legal punishment of a high character? The punishment inflicted on the Mormon who refuses to take the test-oath in Utah is precisely the same which the Constitution inflicts on the President of the United States, or any other high official, who is impeached by the House of Representatives and convicted by the Senate. He is removed from office, and disqualified to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit, and he is still liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment for the crime of bigamy according to law; just as the President, if impeached and convicted, would be liable in the courts to trial and punishment for his crime after he had suffered the penalties which follow the conviction on impeachment. And this high penalty of removal from office and disqualification is inflicted under an act of Congress passed long after the crime was committed.

Can any lawyer defend an act so palpably ex post facto and void, inflicting the highest punishment known to the Constitution of the country for a crime committed before its passage; a punishment as high as that which follows the conviction of the highest officer of the Government when impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors?

I beg to refer to the fact that the Utah Commission has in practice denied the citizen of Utah who does not now practice polygamy the right to hold office if he practiced it at any time during his past life. The commission in their first report, page 6, say:

Did Congress intend that those only should be excluded who at the very time of their registration or election were then living in polygamy or in unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman? If so, such a construction would render this section a perfect nullity. The means of evasion are patent to the dullest apprehension. We therefore conclude that neither the letter nor the spirit of the statute requires such a narrow construction, and in our published rules and regulations we gave the exclusion a wider scope and application.

In the case of Jennings, he admitted that he practiced polygamy prior to the passage of the statute, 1st July, 1862, making it penal, but that one of his wives died about 1871, and he had never since had more than one wife; and upon this state of facts he claimed the right to vote. The question was submitted to the commission, and they decided that having once practiced polygamy, though it was before the passage of the act making it penal, and if afterwards the crime had long since been barred by the statute of limitations, still he was ineligible, and they refused to permit him to vote or hold office.

Now, apply to Jennings's case the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Chase, and the act is clearly unconstitutional, because it inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when perpetrated. In addition to the old penalty, it denies his right to vote, forfeits his estate in his office, and denies to him the right to hold office, which could not be done, because no previous law, in the language of Chief-Justice Marshall, rendered him liable to that punishment.

And in the language of the supreme court of the State of Massachusetts, cited in the above-stated case, if it does not increase the old it adds a new punishment for an offense committed before its passage. How could a Mormon at the time of committing the offense years ago know, in the language of the last-named court, the whole extent of the punishment? How could he know that the wisdom of Congress would at some future day pass the Edmunds bill?

This law therefore punishes the citizen of Utah for what is now held to be an offense by legislative enactment, and not by the judgment of a court, denying him the right to a trial by jury, and in that respect it is also unconstitutional. The Constitution says, article 3, section 2, paragraph 3:

The trial of all crimes, except in case of impeachment, shall be by jury.

I beg the pardon of the Senate for taking up so much time reading authorities. But as they are in point and are the opinions of able judges, and as the question is an important one, I have relied upon your indulgence. These authorities establish the points I have taken against this law to my mind beyond all question.

First. That the citizen of Utah who is an office-holder has a property in his office.

Second. That this act of Congress violates the social compact, Magna Charta, and the Constitution of the United States, by depriving him of that property without due process of law, in this: that he is in effect convicted and his property forfeited without presentment or indictment of a grand jury; that he is denied a trial by jury; that he is denied the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him; that he is denied compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; that he is denied the assistance of counsel for his defense; and that he is compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case or that his silence is construed as conclusive evidence of guilt.

Third. That the act is in the nature of a bill of attainder, and is a usurpation by the legislative department of the Government of the functions assigned by the Constitution to the judicial department, being a sentence of forfeiture pronounced by Congress, which, being a judicial and not a legislative act, can only be done by the judiciary after trial and conviction.

Fourth. That the law is not and was not intended to be a law prescribing qualifications for office, but a penal law, forfeiting his property for the commission of an act which at the time of its commission had no such penalty annexed by law, and that the act or offense is punished by this law in a manner different from that prescribed by law at the time of its commission; and that the law is for this reason ex post facto and void.

The defendant is put upon trial not before a judicial tribunal, but before a commission appointed by Congress; he is made the witness against himself, and if he refuses to swear that he is not guilty, he is judged to be guilty and punished by disfranchisement.

But I may be told that while the authorities I have referred to might well apply to a similar act passed by Congress applicable to the States, as in the case of the lawyers' test-oath, or passed by a State, as in the case of the Missouri test-oath, that they do not apply to a test-oath passed by Congress as applicable to a Territory. And it may be claimed that the power of Congress over a Territory or the inhabitants of a Territory is absolute and uncontrollable, and that Congress may pass any law it thinks proper to pass applicable to Territories without constitutional restraint.

I deny the correctness of this position, and respectfully submit that the Congress of the United States has no greater power to violate the Constitution of the United States in the Territories, nor to pass laws that are unconstitutional as applied to the citizens of a Territory, than it has to pass like laws applicable to the citizens of States. Under what delegated power does Congress derive its right of absolute legislation in the Territories? I presume it must be found in the following grant, if found at all:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

The language "territory and other property," putting territory on the same footing with other property, does not seem to contemplate the government of communities or districts of country. But it seems to refer to rules and regulations respecting the territory as property as distinguished from population or an organized community. Territory and other property does not seem to mean a territorial government, but it puts territory as property, because it says that and other property. It would seem that this was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, who, treating it as property, were careful to protect the claims of the General Government and of the States to it as property.

But however imperfect the language of the Constitution may be, to confer such power it must be admitted that Congress has practiced upon the rule that it had the power to legislate for the Territories from the earlier periods of the Government, and the Supreme Court has sanctioned that practice. But this claim does not prove, nor has the Supreme Court held, that the power of Congress in the Territories is omnipotent, or that Congress may violate the spirit and letter of the Constitution by its legislation as applicable to the Territories. There are many things that Congress has no more power to do in the Territories than it has in a State. To illustrate: Congress has no power to pass any law applicable to any Territory for the establishment of religion or the prevention of the free exercise of religion therein; nor can it grant any title of nobility in a Territory; nor can it destroy or abrogate the right of trial by jury; nor can it suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, unless in case of rebellion or invasion; nor can it pass any law requiring excessive bail, or impose cruel or unusual punishments; nor can it by law justify unreasonable searches and seizures without the proper warrants; nor can it deny to any person the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him when on trial in any criminal case; nor can it deny to the defendant compulsory process to compel the attendance of his own witness; nor can it deprive any one of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor can it pass any law abridging the right of citizens of the United States to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; nor can it establish involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime; nor can it pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law; nor can it compel any person to be a witness against himself in any criminal case; nor can it destroy the principles of local self-government in a Territory as practiced for the last fifty years; nor can it refuse to govern the Territory according to the genius and spirit of our republican form of govern-ment; nor can it do many other acts which are prohibited by the Constitution; nor can it exercise any authority not delegated by the Constitution.

These instances are, I trust, sufficient to show that there exists in Congress no absolute power of unlimited legislation in the Territories. Congress has the right to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory, in the singular, not Territories, and other property of the United States. That is the grant of power, and that is all of it. But this does not delegate to Congress the right to make any laws as applicable to the Territories or any rules or regulations for their government which violate the genius and spirit of our republican institutions or which are prohibited to Congress by the Constitution; nor, indeed, any which are not within the scope of its delegated powers.

The language as applicable to the District of Columbia, &c., is very different and much more full and ample. That provision gives to Congress the power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever over such District, not exceeding ten miles square, as may by cession of the particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of Government of the United States, and to exercise a like authority over all places purchased, by consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

In the first case the language is, Congress may dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations concerning the territory (not Territories) and other property of the United States. In the last case, Congress may exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever.

The framers of the Constitution well understood the force and import of language, and it is very evident that they did not intend to confer power as plenary in the one case just quoted as they did in the other. In so far then as the right to legislate for the Territories is concerned, I am of the opinion Congress can rightfully exercise no power except such as is delegated to it by the Constitution. In the case of the District of Columbia and other places above mentioned, as the grant is plenary, Congress may exercise exclusive legislative powers, and enact and enforce any law that is not in conflict with some prohibitory provision of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court has held that the powers of the Territorial Legislature extend to all rightful objects of legislation, subject to the restriction that their laws shall not be inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States. (1 Peters, 543.)

The test-oath prescribed by the constitution of Missouri during the war was similar to that prescribed under the act of March, 1882, as applicable to Utah in its disfranchisement, and was declared null and void by the Supreme Court of the United States, because it was a bill of pains and penalties, which neither the State nor the General Government had any right to pass.

I insist that Congress has no power in the Territories to pass any law violating these fundamental provisions of the Constitution. By articles 9 and 10 of the amendments to the Constitution the rights not delegated to the Congress by the States in the Constitution are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. The reservation of them to the States respectively, speaking of them as organized bodies, would embrace a reservation to the people who composed the State. But as many of the people might not be inhabitants of a State, but might live on the territory belonging to the Government, the reservation is put in the alternative, "to the States respectively or to the people." Therefore the reservation of powers not delegated applied as well to the people of a Territory as to the people of the States.

Congress may go to the extent of the delegated powers in passing laws for the Territories or in punishing crime there; but it has no right to pass laws prohibited by imperative provisions of the Constitution; nor has it the right to exceed the delegated powers in the enactment of laws for the government of the Territories. I deny that the power is anywhere delegated to Congress in the Constitution to destroy local self-government as long practiced in a Territory, or to destroy a republican form of government in a Territory, or to destroy the right of trial by jury, which the Constitution declares shall be preserved. The accused is in every case entitled to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury before any penalty or punishment or disability of any kind can be inflicted upon him.

Again, Congress is required by the Constitution to guarantee to each State a republican form of government. Will it be insisted by any one that Congress has a right in a Territory belonging to the United States, inhabited by citizens of the United States, who are entitled to the protection guaranteed by the Constitution to citizens, to destroy a republican form of government, and to govern the Territory by commissions of military men, or civilians, or satraps, or provisional governors, in an arbitrary, tyrannical, or unconstitutional manner, violative of the very first principles of republican government? The framers of the Constitution intended no such inconsistency as a guarantee of a republican form of government in the States and the destruction of republican government in the Territories.

If Congress has the power to destroy the Territorial government in Utah, and send commissioners, military dictators, or satraps to govern the Territory for five years, it has the same power to embrace in the same category all the territory belonging to the United States. And if it may govern any portion of it, it may govern all of it by a satrap. And if it may continue such government for a term of years, there is no reason why, in its good pleasure, it may not continue it for one hundred years or five hundred, making the Territory a province, to be plundered at will by the party in power.

I can never subscribe to the doctrine that citizens of the several States, who leave their homes in the States and establish homes in the Territories, thereby lose their rights as citizens of the United States under the Constitution or lose the protection the Constitution guarantees to them against arbitrary tyranny or oppression. Nor can I believe that Congress may rightfully in such case govern them outside of the Constitution, or that it may exercise despotic, arbitrary, or unlimited power over the people of the Territories. They are as much citizens of the United States as are the citizens of the several States, and they are as much entitled to exercise the rights guaranteed by the Constitution as any of the other citizens of the United States are. They have a right to all the protection that the inhibitory clauses of the Constitution throw between them and the exercise of arbitrary power, whether it is attempted to be exercised by Congress or any other department of Government.

The Government of Great Britain, though a monarchy, does not claim the right to exercise any such power over the English-speaking inhabitants of Great Britain or the British provinces. When the original thirteen States were provinces of Great Britain the people claimed the right of local self-government, and they resorted to revolution and open resistance to the government rather than submit to taxation without representation. By an attempt to exercise the very power that it is now proposed by some persons that the United States shall exercise over Utah the British Government lost the provinces, which at the end of the war became thirteen sovereign and independent States, which united and formed this great Government of ours. The power of local self-government lies at the very foundation of our system. The powers of the General Government are limited to the grant made by the States in the Constitution, and the citizens of the States and of the Territories of the Union are alike protected by the inhibitory clauses of the Constitution to which I have invited the attention of the Senate.

The proposition is a monstrous one, that the Government of the United States has the power to destroy local self-government as it has heretofore existed in the Territories, to subvert the principles of our republican system there, or to send irresponsible commissions, agents, or despots to insult, rob, and plunder the citizens of a Territory, whose constitutional rights are inalienable and should be protected wherever the flag floats over an American freeman. If such power exists, it is the power of brute force, not of right; a power which no enlightened republic can afford to exercise over its citizens.

A few words about the practice and policy of the Government in its legislation in reference to the Territories may not be out of place here. After Virginia had ceded the northwestern territory to the Government of the United States, the Congress, in 1787, passed an ordinance for its government, in which it is provided that—

The governor and judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress from time to time; which laws shall be in force in the district until the organization of the General Assembly therein, unless disapproved by Congress; but afterward the Legislature shall have authority to alter them as they shall see fit.

In a subsequent part of the ordinance it is provided that—

So soon as there shall be 5,000 free male inhabitants of full age in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships to represent them in the General Assembly.

It then fixes the number of representatives at 1 to every 500 free male inhabitants until the number shall amount to 25, after which the proportion of representatives shall be regulated by the Legislature. It then prescribes the qualifications of representatives and voters. It also provides for filling vacancies, &c. This was the earliest act passed by Congress for the government of the Territory, and at that time it was called district, and not Territory; and as you will readily see, Mr. President, the Congress provided for a republican form of government for the Territory, and for local self-government in the Territory, so far as the legislative functions were concerned. (See Statutes at Large, volume 1, page 51.)

By act of May 26, 1790, provision was made for the government of the territory of the United States south of the Ohio River, which the statute declared should be similar to that which was then exercised in the territory northwest of the Ohio. (Volume 1, page 123.)

As you see, Congress did not leave the governor and judges to legislate, but authorized them to select laws from those passed by the States for the Territory until it had sufficient inhabitants to enable it to elect a legislature, when it was to assume legislative functions; and the same rule was applicable to the territory south of the Ohio River.

Kentucky was part of Virginia, and with the consent of Virginia she formed herself into a State, and was admitted into the Union 1st of June, 1792.

Tennessee, having been ceded to the United States by North Carolina, was admitted into the Union with but little Territorial history.

The Territory of Mississippi was organized April 7, 1798, with the same privileges which the people of the Northwestern Territory enjoyed under the ordinance of 1787 except the provision as to slavery. By act of 10th of May, 1800, the right to elect representatives was provided for with property qualification. The property qualification was removed by act of October 25, 1814 (volume 3, page 143), and it had representative government until its admission into the Union.

On the 3d of March, 1817, the Territory of Alabama was organized from a portion of the Territory of Mississippi, and the representatives elected under the laws governing the Mississippi Territory who fell within the Territory of Alabama were to continue as the legislative assembly of that State. The town of Saint Stephens was declared to be the seat of government for the Territory until it should be otherwise ordered by the Legislature thereof.

By act of April 20, 1802, the people of the eastern part of the Northwestern Territory were authorized, in a convention elected by the people, to form a State government, preparatory to admission into the Union, with such name as they might adopt. The State of Ohio was thereupon organized as a State and admitted into the Union. (See volume 2, page 173.)

Having purchased the Territory of Louisiana from France, the President was authorized, by act of March 31, 1803, to take possession of it, and to use any part of the Army and Navy necessary for that purpose. We had just purchased the Territory, the inhabitants were not friendly to the people of the United States, and did not speak our language; hence it was necessary to use extraordinary means to take possession of the Territory and to form a government there. A Territorial government was established by act of March 26, 1804, which vested the legislative power in the governor and thirteen fit and discreet persons of the Territory, with the powers usually given in such cases. (Volume 2, page 284.)

A similar instance occurred in the case of the Territory of Florida. A hostile state of feeling had existed between the Spanish Government in Florida and the people of the United States for many years. Finally the Government of the United States purchased the Territory of Florida, and by the act of March 30, 1822, a Territorial government was established there, and, as the people were foreign and spoke a still different language, extraordinary means were deemed necessary in the government of the Territory, and the legislative power was vested in the governor and thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons in the Territory, to be called the Legislative Council, appointed annually by the President of the United States. There was also a short period when the Northwestern Territory was controlled by a governor and judges. But these were extraordinary occasions, at an early period of the Government, when there did not seem to be any fixed policy in reference to the organization and control of the Territories. But after the arbitrary government of the Territory of Florida had ceased we find no more instances of the application of such rules to any Territory, and for the last sixty years there has been no instance that has fallen under my observation where the right to elect the general assembly and in most cases the local officers has been denied to a Territory.

The unbroken practice for more than half a century has been uniformly in favor of local self-government so far as the election of the legislative assembly was concerned.

The Territories of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Mississippi, and Alabama were given the same right of self-government which was secured to the people of the Northwestern Territory by the ordinance of 1787.

The State of Maine formed a part of the territory of Massachusetts, and with the consent of Massachusetts formed an independent State, and was admitted into the Union in 1820. (Volume 3, page 544.)

The Territory of Arkansas was organized by act of March 2, 1815, and the legislative power was vested in a legislature, to be elected by the people so soon as it was organized.

The Territory of Missouri was organized under an act of June 4, 1812. A governor, legislative council, and a house of representatives elected by the people had the legislative power. (See volume 2, page 744.) And by an act of April 27, 1816, the qualified voters were authorized also to choose the legislative council. (Volume 3, page 328.) There were other instances in the early unsettled period where the legislative council as well as the governor were appointed by the President, but the house of representatives was invariably elected by the people. These instances occurred when there was no settled policy applicable to the Territories. For the last half century, as a rule, the legislative council and house of representatives and generally the local officers have been elected by the people under the various acts providing for the organization of the respective Territories. This rule applied to the following Territories, organized as hereafter stated:

Minnesota, by act of March 3, 1849. (Volume 9, pages 403, 404.)
New Mexico, act September 9, 1850 (volume 9, page 448).
Nebraska, act May 30, 1854 (volume 10, page 278).
Kansas, by the same act (volume 10, pages 284 and 285).
Territory of Washington, act March 3, 1853 (volume 10, page 172).
Territory of Oregon, act August 14, 1849 (volume 9, page 323).
Territory of Utah, act September 9, 1850 (volume 9, page 453).
Territory of Nevada, act March 2, 1861 (volume 12, page 210).
Territory of Colorado, act February 28, 1861 (volume 12, page 172).

California, having formed a State government without Territorial pupilage, was admitted as a State September 9, 1850 (volume 9, page 452). The collection laws were extended over the Territory by an act of March 3, 1849 (volume 9, page 400); and in all these later instances, without exception, the right to elect their own general assembly is given to the people of the Territory. The same is true of the remaining Territories of Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, and Arizona.

Now, let it be borne in mind that the Government invited emigrants from the different States into the Territories. By giving them lands for their homes and holding out other inducements it got them to occupy the Territories, and it established Territorial governments with the privileges already mentioned.

This has been an unbroken practice, as already stated, for more than fifty years, and thousands and tens of thousands of people have been induced to go into the Territories and settle by the well-known policy of the Government, and they have acquired rights there under the Constitution and laws which Congress has neither moral nor legal authority to take from them. They have acquired the right of local self-government so far as the election of their own members of the legislature and their own local officers are concerned, and we have no moral right, after inducing them to go to the Territories with the assurance that they would have the rights the acts of Congress gave and which half a century's practice confirms, to abridge or destroy these rights.

Take, as an illustration, the Territory of Utah, at which the unfriendly legislation is aimed. The people of that Territory exposed themselves as those of few Territories ever have, and they endured an amount of suffering and privation that few people have ever been able to bear. They located in that distant wilderness, at the time a thousand miles from the nearest settlement in any of the States. Congress extended over them the laws of the United States and gave them a liberal Territorial government. Under it they have grown and prospered to a remarkable degree, and because there have been 12,000 persons found there who will not swear that they have at no time in their lives been guilty of bigamy or polygamy, it is proposed by members of Congress and others occupying high positions to destroy the government of Utah so far as its elective form is concerned, put it under a commission appointed by the President, deny to its people the right to elect their own members to the Legislature or their own local officers, deny them the right to elect a Territorial Delegate to Congress, which every Territory enjoys, put the feet of the power of this Government upon their necks, and crush them because there have been found among them 12,000 men and women who will not take an illegal oath which has been tendered to them, and who are therefore presumed to be guilty of bigamy or polygamy.

If this unconstitutional and illegal action applied only to the guilty parties there would be some pretext for the usurpation; but we punish 138,000 people who have not practiced polygamy in order to make sure that we have punished 12,000 who are believed to be guilty of that offense. We not only tear down the Territorial government, but we expose the whole people of the Territory, the innocent as well as the guilty, to a system of government which will enable those in authority to rob and plunder the people at pleasure. And it must, I suppose, be understood by the people of Utah that they are to be governed by a commission or a satrap, until the population who have heretofore practiced polygamy, and who are a small minority of the people, consent to abandon their plural-wife system, and adopt instead of it the system of prostitution, fœticide, and sexual impurity practiced in other sections of the Union.

But they have another sin to atone for before they can be forgiven. The people of Utah for the last twenty years have felt that the Republican party in power has done them great injustice; consequently they are not as good Republicans as it is thought by some of the leaders of that party they ought to be. They must therefore consent to change their politics, at least to the extent of agreeing to be admitted into the Union as a Republican State, before the innocence of a large majority of the people will be considered by the political party in power sufficient to atone for the guilt of the minority.

The Utah Commission, in prescribing an oath for the voter, was careful not to interfere with the sexual privileges of non-Mormons in the Territory; consequently they require the voters to swear that they are not bigamists or polygamists, and that they do not cohabit with more than one woman in the marriage relation. If they do, they are denied the right to vote or hold office. But each inhabitant of Utah who has a wife and as many mistresses as he chooses to keep, if he does not claim that he keeps them in the marriage relation, has a perfect right to vote and hold office. It will therefore doubtless be required of the Mormons that they abandon their system of cohabiting with more than one woman "in the marriage relation," and adopt in its stead the system of one wife, with such other indulgences outside of the marriage relation as they choose to practice.

When they have consented to do this, and adopt the more popular mode against which there is no such popular clamor as exists against polygamy, and when they have declared themselves in favor of the Republican party, their many sins will doubtless be forgiven by the high priests of the party, and they will be a remarkably proper people to trust with the delicate and responsible duties of self-government. In other words, if they will only change the name, and resort to the same practices under a different name, and will sacrifice their political opinions and join the party in power, they will be embraced as brethren, and they will no longer be proscribed and made the victims of popular vengeance.

The Utah Commission report about 150,000 people in the Territory. Of this number there are 40,000 non-Mormons, leaving about 110,000 Mormons. Of this number about 12,000, male and female—as the women vote there—declined to take the oath, and are set down as practicing polygamy. As the oath applies to all their past lives, it is fair to infer that not more than 12,000 now living have ever engaged in this pernicious practice; and probably many of the 12,000 refused to swear that they were not polygamists or bigamists; not that they had practiced polygamy, but because they approved it.

There are over fifty millions of people in the United States; and there are probably twenty times as many persons practicing prostitution, or illegal sexual intercourse, in the other parts of the Union as the whole number who practice it in Utah. Many of the features of its practice in the other States and Territories, including fœticide, illegal divorce, &c., are quite as revolting or more so than in Utah. It is assumed in the other parts of the Union, where a greatly larger number of persons practice sexual impurity than the whole number of Mormon polygamists, that polygamy must be put down at any cost. It is certainly a matter of great importance that polygamy, prostitution, fœticide, and illegal divorce, whether practiced in Utah or in any other part of the United States, should be put down. And if we have it in our power by constitutional means to accomplish that end no one would be more rejoiced than I. But having taken a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States, I can not as a Senator vote for a measure which I am satisfied is a plain violation of the Constitution to crush out polygamy or to accomplish any other object. And we would do well to bear in mind that if the Congress of the United States disregards and violates the Constitution of the United States in its eager haste to crush a sect but little over one hundred thousand strong, the result of the precedent may be the crushing out of one sect after another, until it ends in the complete overthrow of the liberties of fifty millions of people, who are expected to applaud our efforts to crush the Mormons without regard to constitutional difficulties or constitutional obligations.

No matter what the popular applause may be on the one hand or the popular condemnation on the other, I will join in no hue and cry against any sect that requires me to vote for measures in open violation of the fundamental law of the land. And we would do well to bear in mind that an illegal persecution of any sect always excites sympathy for the persecuted and greatly increases its numbers. The late Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, when asked what would be the effect of the Edmunds bill on Mormonism, replied, "The effect will be to make more Mormons."

But I may be asked, "What means can we adopt to destroy this great evil in Utah?" I reply we can not do it by passing unconstitutional laws, or adopting illegal or unconstitutional means, or by striking down republican government in the Territory.

The Christian Churches of this country spend hundreds of thousands of dollars every year sending missionaries to foreign lands where polygamy is practiced. In India and in China alone more than 500,000,000 of people practice or acquiesce in the practice of polygamy. And yet the Christian Churches are not discouraged, but they send missionaries there, hoping finally to convert the whole mass of the people. Why, then, should we not send missionaries to Utah, where only about 12,000 people practice and a little over 100,000 people believe in polygamy? If the Christian Churches are willing to make the effort to convert 500,000,000 of polygamists in the East, why should they not with less effort convert 100,000 within the limits of our own land? If the first task is within the range of possibility, what is there to discourage us from the smaller undertaking? There are a great many people in Utah who might be converted by the proper effort. They are our neighbors, our fellow-citizens. Shall we give them up as reprobates, and make no effort to save them, and join in a crusade to crush them? They speak our language; they are within easy reach. Why give them up and turn to the heathen of other lands, who neither understand our language nor have anything of race or sympathy in common with us? Have the Christian Churches done their duty to the Mormon people? If you can not convince their leaders, you can convert thousands of the people. It may be easier to cry "Crucify them" than it is to try to help convert them. But can the Churches reconcile it to conscience that duty is as well performed in the one case as in the other?

There is also another mode of accomplishing it. If the honorable Senator from Vermont, or any other gentleman of his distinguished ability who feels the very deep interest that he evidently does in suppressing polygamy, will head a colony of 50,000 New England people, who will settle in Utah, my high estimate of the energy and enterprise of the people of New England justifies the conclusion that in a few years the present prevailing usages of Utah on the social question will give place to what by popular consent are admitted to be the more refined, delicate, voluptuous, and attractive practices of the people of New England. Immigration into the Territory sufficient to control its vote at the ballot-box and missionaries from Christian Churches to teach the people of that Territory the truths of the Gospel are an infinitely better remedy than unconstitutional, arbitrary, and oppressive enactments by Congress.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. GARLAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON in the chair). The Senator from Illinois. Does he yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to make a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to say a few words; and I am very glad the Senator from Illinois has made that suggestion. I will make a statement to him, and I think possibly he will change the reference. The Committee on the Judiciary reported the act which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has argued against and has also before it several propositions looking to the government of Utah Territory. If this bill goes to the Committee on Territories we shall have the labor divided; and I suggest to him that he change his intention of referring it to the Committee on Territories and refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM. Not being on either commiteee, I have no personal interest in the matter, but it does seem to me that if the Committee on Territories has any control whatever over the subjects that pertain to the interests of the Territories this ought to be one of them. If there is to be any serious question as to where the bill ought to go, as the chairman of the Committee on Territories is not in his seat, as the Senator from Arkansas knows, I suggest that the bill lie on the table, and I will withdraw the motion to refer until the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] returns.

Mr. GARLAND. I have no objection if the Senator prefers that the bill should go to the Territorial Committee, but I am simply speaking by way of expediting the work and not getting a conflict of jurisdiction on this important subject.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the chairman of the Committee on Territories and the members of that committee generally would feel that this subject belongs to them for consideration, primarily at least.

Mr. GARLAND. As I am on both committees, I am as disinterested about where the bill shall go as the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest that the question of referring this bill has been settled by the custom of the Senate. The Senate has had occasion to deal with the question of polygamy several times in the past. The act which is commonly known as the Edmunds bill was matured by the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Senate has already sent to the Judiciary Committee a supplementary bill to that which passed in addition to the Edmunds bill reported to the Senate from the Judiciary Committee last winter. It is an elaborate supplementary bill to the act which is now a law, which came from the Judiciary Committee. I understand that at every session of the Senate the Senate has committed to the Judiciary Committee the bills which relate to Mormonism. As I understand the usage of the Senate it does not send to the Committee on Territories general legislation which involves constitutional and other considerations merely because it happens to be confined in its application to the Territories, but it is rather our general system of Territorial government, the question of the admission of Territories, dealing with their interests, and so on, not questions of a legal character, which the Senate has sent to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois that the bill lie on the table until the chairman of the Committee on Territories shall return will be satisfactory to the Senate. I am new on the Committee on Territories, but I know that the chairman of that committee felt that this bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Territories. To my mind there are very many reasons why it should be so referred, and I think courtesy to the chairman requires that the bill should lie on the table until he may have an opportunity to express his opinion on the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. I will make the motion that the subject of the reference of the bill be postponed until the 15th of the present month.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; let it lie on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. That is quite satisfactory to me.

Now I wish to say a word or two on the subject. When the bill known as the Edmunds bill was before the Senate nearly two years ago it was elaborately discussed on all the grounds which have been suggested so ably by the Senator from Georgia who has just taken his seat. The bill passed the Senate and the House and is now a law of the United States; and the legal presumption is that that bill is constitutional until it is declared otherwise. The argument made so ably by the Senator from Georgia was advanced against the bill when it was pending before the Senate by himself and other Senators. All the questions arising upon the plenary power of Congress over the Territories was discussed and the authorities given, the friends of what is called the Edmunds bill claiming that from the earliest practice of the Government and from the earliest decisions, commencing with the celebrated case of Carter, in 2 Peters, relating to the Territory of Florida, and coming down to about the middle of Wallace's Reports, there had been no deviation, no change, in the doctrine that Congress had plenary power over the Territories, and that nothing in that bill deprived any man of his right of property. As to the power of Congress over the Territories, some contend that it is derived from the clause of the Constitution just preceding the one referred to by the Senator from Georgia as to making all needful rules for the regulation of the territory and other property of the United States, that is to say, the clause which gives Congress power to admit new States; but I think this general power over the Territories comes from both of these clauses, and that power is ample for all the purposes proposed by the Edmunds bill, and more too.

The decision in the case from Missouri of Happersett vs. Minor, in 21 Wallace, was referred to and commented on, which draws a distinction between a mere civil right, as a right to vote or a right to hold office, and a right to property, as a man's right to a horse or to land or to a house. All those arguments were gone over by different gentlemen, not of course as compactly and as thoroughly as the Senator from Georgia has to-day presented them.

The objection that I had to the Edmunds bill, as it is called, was that it did not go far enough; it was simply the application of a corn-plaster to cure a case of consumption. We afterwards brought in a bill that took the step I wanted, which the action of the commission there has shown to be a necessity. When that bill is passed in addition to the Edmunds bill, I think then the problem will be solved. I confess that upon the proposition to so amend, when I first thought of it I had some doubt, arising upon the fourth classification as to ex post facto laws as laid down by Judge Chase in Calder vs. Bull, in 3 Dallas's Reports. The fourth classification as laid down by him refers to the alteration of the law as to the testimony upon which to convict for a crime which has been already committed. But I was relieved of that difficulty by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Miles vs. The United States, in the one hundred and third volume of United States Reports, and inasmuch as that proposition is coming in some shape back from the committee to the Senate, I wish now, since this matter has been sprung, to present it to the Senate for what it is worth. Miles escaped, as all others had escaped, because of the difficulty of proving illegal marriage in that Territory. The Supreme Court say:

> It is made clear by the record that polygamous marriages are so celebrated in Utah as to make the proof of polygamy very difficult. They are conducted in secret, and the persons by whom they are solemnized are under such obligations of secrecy that it is almost impossible to extract the facts from them when placed upon the witness stand. If both wives are excluded from testifying to the first marriage, as we think they should be under the existing rules of evidence, testimony sufficient to convict in a prosecution for polygamy in the Territory of Utah is hardly attainable. But this is not a consideration by which we can be influenced. We must administer the law as we find it. The remedy is with Congress, by enacting such a change in the law of evidence in the Territory of Utah as to make both wives witnesses on indictments for bigamy. (103 U. S. Reports—13 Otto, 315, 316.)

The Supreme Court, after frequently tusseling with this question and being thwarted, has mapped out a way for Congress to get at it and obviate all this trouble. What we wanted to do in the start with the Edmunds bill, but did not see proper to bring forward, now stands in the new bill; and I think when the path has been mapped out by the Supreme Court so plainly that a blind man can see it by following it, we shall cure the evil in that Territory, and not without it; and for that reason I put upon record this decision of the Supreme Court, and a unanimous decision at that.

One word as to this business of sects. That question has been sifted before the Supreme Court in the case of Reynolds, that came from that Territory, in the ninety-eighth volume of United States Reports. It was presented in every conceivable shape by learned authors from the time of Aristotle to the present, and the Supreme Court unanimously said that men could not shelter themselves under the guise and color of their religion or their sect, if you please so to call it, against the law of the land made to extirpate polygamy or bigamy from that Territory. According to the view which was stamped out by that decision of the court a man could defend himself in this country from any crime by saying it was a part of his religion to commit that crime. I always thought that Guiteau made a mistake in his pleading; I always thought he should have traversed the indictment, and denied that he was moved and instigated by the devil and averred that he was moved and instigated by the Lord. Then, according to the doctrine of sect and the protection of religion, he would have gone free; but the Supreme Court would have told him, as it said in the Reynolds case, we know no such doctrine in this country to protect a man from crime because of his religion.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care to make a motion, but simply suggest that the bill lie over until the return of the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is suggested that the bill lie over until the return of the chairman of the Committee on Territories. If there be no objection, the bill will lie on the table for the present.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the unfinished business will now be resumed, being the report of the Committee on Rules. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the substitute proposed by his colleague [Mr. FRYE] for Rule XXVI, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In the clause relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia it is proposed, after "nine Senators," to strike out—

> To which shall be referred all bills making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that the Senate has decidedly voted in all other cases to adhere to its ancient ways and to dismember no committee, and I hope that rule which it has set in other cases will be followed here. I do not want to take any more time.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], who is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). I understand my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. PIKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. VAN WYCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VANCE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I understand that while out of the Chamber I was paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I did not know that when I voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the substitute for the rule proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] as amended.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The vote just taken was on agreeing to the substitute. Now the question is, Shall the rule be adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee is probably correct.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to offer an amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks he was right in stating the question before. The Senator from Maine moved to amend——

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will pardon me a moment. I understand the question was put on the adoption of an amendment, which amendment simply changed the order of the committees named in the rule. That amendment the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] moved to amend, and it has been amended. The question now is on the original amendment as amended.

Mr. HALE. That has already been carried.

Mr. HOAR. There is a misunderstanding. The rule was the pending question. The Senator from Maine on my left [Mr. FRYE] moved to amend by substituting it in a new draught, which was an amendment; that was the changing of the order of the committees. Then the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] moved to amend the amendment in the second degree, and his amendment has been carried on the yeas and nays

Mr. HALE. As also has the substitute moved by my colleague, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. I have not heard that question put.

Mr. HALE. That question was put, and we proceeded to another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state now that he thinks the Senator from Tennessee is in error. The question was first, on which the yeas and nays were taken, on amending the substitute for the whole rule offered by the Senator from Maine who sits in front of the Chair. That was agreed to on the yeas and nays. Then the Chair stated that the question recurred on agreeing to the substitute for Rule XXVI proposed by the Senator from Maine in front of the Chair, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, as amended. That motion was put and agreed to, so that the Chair thinks that Rule XXVI is now disposed of by the vote of the Senate in agreeing to a substitute for the whole rule from beginning to end, proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rules as amended by the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I was inattentive. I had desired, after the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Maine on the left of the Chair [Mr. HALE], to propose to amend the substitute by striking out the word "nine," in respect to the Committee on Appropriations, and inserting the word "eleven," for the reason that the Senate was informed the other day, and I doubt not correctly—I have not looked to it—by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], that all the committees having charge of the important branches of the public service were represented upon the Committee on Appropriations except two, the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. We have several committees with eleven members already, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Commerce, and perhaps others; and I think it very important that every committee charged with an important branch of the public service should at least have one representative upon the Committee on Appropriations, and for that reason I desire to offer that amendment. If it be necessary I will ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted in order that I may offer the amendment and test the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the substitute offered by the chairman of the Committee on Rules for Rule XXVI for the purpose he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MAXEY. I was in entire sympathy with the Senator from Maine and voted with him all the way through, but I think that the Post-Office Committee, of which I have been a member for years, should not be without representation upon the Committee on Appropriations. That committee is one of very great importance. Very many million dollars are affected by the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department, and I think it better that that committee should have one of its members upon the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to treating the vote agreeing to the substitute proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rules as reconsidered?

Mr. MORRILL. I should rather hope that this motion to increase the number of the Committee on Appropriations would not be adopted. I think it will injure the efficiency of the committee to enlarge it. All members of the Senate are not as prompt in their attendance upon committee meetings as the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS.] If they were there would be less difficulty about getting a quorum. The larger the committee is the more it takes for a quorum; and if we are to have all the committees represented upon the Committee on Appropriations that are of any vital importance, that committee will not embrace the whole number until its numbers shall amount to as many as thirty. I do not see that this matter can be arranged satisfactorily if that idea is to prevail. Indeed, I thought one idea that was prominent on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Rules was that Senators having one position upon the Committee on Appropriations, on the Judiciary, or on Finance, should not occupy any other committee position. It seems to me that this would magnify the evil which the Senator from Maine very justly, perhaps, sought to remedy. I hope at all events that the vote will not be reconsidered and that the committee will not be enlarged.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no sort of objection to the Senator from Tennessee, as he did not understand how the vote had been given, having the question taken upon his amendment; but I certainly hope that the Senate will not now, after considering these rules so long and having, as I said once before, voted down all propositions to change the committees, now proceed to add to the number of the Appropriations Committee. That committee at many times has to sit during the sessions of the Senate, having leave by the rules so to do. It is a difficult thing frequently to get a quorum. The larger the number of the committee, the larger must needs be the quorum necessary to do business and the greater the difficulty. I do not know that any complaint is made now that the committee does not with its present force do its duty and perform its labors faithfully.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to inquire as to the practice of the committee, of which I am entirely ignorant? I suppose the committee divides itself into subcommittees and refers particular bills to particular subcommittees.

Mr. HALE. That is its invariable course.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I should like to know how those subcommittees are composed, how many there are, and what number of Senators on each.

Mr. HALE. Each bill is referred to a subcommittee of three members. Each bill receives consideration first in that subcommittee, which, as in other committees, reports to the full committee. The full committee considers it, not nominally, I may say, but carefully, considerately, and the report is the report of course of the whole committee.

Mr. MORGAN. That would carry about three bills to each subcommittee ordinarily.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the average would be just about what the Senator from Alabama says.

Mr. COCKRELL. Two to some and three to others.

Mr. HALE. Yes; two to some and three to others. But I will not take up any more time of the Senate. I do not think the body is now prepared to make this change, and I am willing the vote should be taken at once.

Mr. MAXEY. I only want to add to what I said before that I believe there are five committees of this body which treat of the matters connected with one Department, while the Post-Office Committee treats of that entire Department, not any branch of it, like the bureaus in the Interior Department or the Treasury Department, but the whole of it. Therefore the members of that committee ought to be conversant with everything that concerns the entire postal service, just as the Military Committee, of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is the able chairman, is with all things connected with the Army. For that reason it seems to me it will be a wise thing, that being the only committee representing a Department of the Government that has no representation upon the Committee on Appropriations, it would be but fair that it should have a member on that committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to add but a single word. I have no special interest in this matter. My judgment is that the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Post-Office Committee ought to be represented upon the Committee on Appropriations. It struck me that there was great force in the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky two or three days ago, when he made answer to the argument in favor of referring the District appropriation bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the suggestion was made that other appropriation bills should be referred to other committees. The Senator from Kentucky then informed us that every committee of this body having charge of the important branches of the public service was represented upon the Committee on Appropriations except two. Now I think in all fairness these two ought to be represented. I seek to displace nobody on the committee, and the only means of representing these other committees is to increase the number.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion here?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. It is not by force of any rule, or indeed by force of any precedent, that it happens that the great committees representing the Departments of the Government are represented upon that committee; and if you add two members, or three, or five, or ten, there is nothing that would settle it that the two departments referred to, the Post-Office and the District of Columbia—the latter not a Department but an interest in the Government—would be represented on that committee. It only happens that the others are; but as the committee is and will be constituted now and hereafter, it may at times happen that neither the Post-Office nor the District of Columbia will be represented, or that they may be and another Department be left out.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite aware of all that, Mr. President; yet if it be important that the committees having charge of the more important branches of the public service should be represented upon the Committee on Appropriations, it is a matter very easy to be regulated by rule, if it shall be necessary to regulate it by rule; but I take for granted, if this enlargement shall take place under the circumstances of to-day and after this discussion, those two committees would be represented upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. I am in favor of this enlargement, and I should be willing to carry it up to thirteen members of this body, my reason being that the subject of appropriations has passed almost entirely within the jurisdiction of that committee. The committee has been growing ever since it was first established, because it was found necessary to bring to its membership a larger number of Senators who were presumed to have a special acquaintance with a wide range of subjects.

I am not willing to break up the establishment of that committee, which I think is a very great check and safeguard upon the appropriation of public money; but I want that committee to have all the strength and all the information that we can give to it, and we can not do it merely by picking members who are supposed to be superior in their knowledge of such questions to the others, or at least we can do it very much better by distributing or widening out the membership of this committee so as to cover a larger field of information to be possessed by the gentlemen who may compose it. I believe it is a movement in the right direction. I think that as many Senators ought to be employed upon this committee as conveniently can transact its business; and inasmuch as it has established now firmly the precedent, the rule, I may say, of referring bills to subcommittees to report back to the general committee——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, the Senator from Kentucky has kindly furnished me with a list of the necessary subcommittees into which that committee is subdivided. There are thirteen of them in number.

Mr. MORGAN. I had said that I would have preferred that there should have been thirteen members upon this committee to eleven. The argument of inconvenience suggested by the Senator from Vermont I think does not hold in this case, for the reason that the committee really does not act upon any bill as a unit except in the review of the work of its subcommittees. There is no danger that any Senator who is upon the Committee on Appropriations will not be on hand, if his health can possibly justify it, night and day, to see to the expenditure. That has got to be the all-absorbing topic not only of the Senate and House of Representatives, but of the country at large. When we have got only a very small sum of money to spend you can get the Senate stirred up into a little degree of excitement about it and a little debate; but when you come to the great subject of spending three hundred millions a year, and distributing that out according to law, through appropriation bills, it is not to be expected that any Senator is going to desert his post or is going to go to sleep upon it. There is too much avidity now for that committee here to lead to the apprehension that we are going to be in the slightest degree indifferent to the actions of that committee. Therefore having this number of subcommittees the inconvenience does not exist, and the want of attention will not be found to be a serious public inconvenience on the part of Senators to their business. They will be there to see to the actions of this committee. I hope the Senate will enlarge it. I should be very glad to see it enlarged to thirteen instead of eleven.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no objection to the enlargement of the committee, but I do object to the composition of that committee being made up simply because the gentlemen are supposed to represent Departments of this Government. The Departments will not fail to make known to the Appropriations Committee their desire for appropriations, and I think the Committee on Appropriations ought to be made up of men wholly independent of the Departments of this Government, so that it can pass upon them without reference to what may be the wishes of the Departments, but act upon their own judgment of what is right and proper.

I am therefore opposed to the motion to reconsider, because it is to be adopted with a view of placing a member from the Post-Office Committee and a member from the District Committee upon the Appropriations Committee to hereafter be a precedent by which the proposition will be made to have representatives of the various Departments of the Government on the Appropriations Committee. There are gentlemen here who are not on the Military Committee or on the Finance Committee or on any other committee representing any Department of this Government who are just as competent to pass upon all questions of appropriations for the Departments as those who are on other committees. I fear the motion now made will become a precedent hereafter for the Committee on Appropriations being composed exclusively of gentlemen representing the different Departments of this Government. I shall therefore vote against the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail, and a division was called for.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe it has been the uniform practice of the Senate where a motion has been made and carried without a vote by yeas and nays to allow a reconsideration on the demand of a Senator. I do not say how I shall vote on the main proposition, but I think it is the right of the Senator from Tennessee to have the motion to reconsider put and carried in the nature of a formal motion, to give the Senator full opportunity to present the subject to the view of the Senate. That has been the usual habit I think, that a motion to reconsider is rather a formal motion adopted as a matter of course, unless there has been an actual vote by yeas and nays. I shall vote therefore for the motion to reconsider without regard to the merits of the question.

Mr. HARRIS. I take for granted after the full explanation of the object of making the motion to reconsider, that the vote upon the motion is conclusive as to its object. Hence I would just as soon test it in the one way as in the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], to reconsider the vote by which the substitute proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] was agreed to.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state in reference to the technical question of order as to the pending question, that when he last suggested his view to the Senate he was under the impression that the final question would be on agreeing to the whole body of the rules as perfected, and under that impression he supposed the question on Rule XXVI had been exhausted. But, as the Chair is informed that the practice has been to adopt each rule finally by itself, the Chair will now put the question on agreeing to Rule XXVI as amended.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs, as the Chair believes, on Rule XVII.

Mr. FRYE. To conform with the action of the Senate on Rule XXVI the two words "Internal Improvements" should be stricken out wherever they occur in Rule XVII and the word "Commerce" inserted in their place. Therefore I move that wherever the words "Internal Improvements" occur in Rule XVII they be stricken out and that the word "Commerce" be inserted in their place.

Mr. HALE. That is in accordance with the vote yesterday?

Mr. FRYE. In accordance with the vote yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that on a former occasion the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] had made the same motion to strike out of Rule XVII the words providing for a committee on internal improvements and the reference of bills to the Committee on Internal Improvements, so as to leave them as they stood before referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that was passed over informally in order to dispose of the question on Rule XXVI. So the Chair thinks the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri substantially like that of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Striking out of Rule XVII the provision for the reference of certain bills to the Committee on Internal Improvements and providing for their being referred to the Committee on Commerce. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The presiding officer understands that vote also to restore the word "Commerce."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To restore the word "Commerce;" so as to read: "Shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce."

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, if no further amendment be proposed to Rule XVII, on agreeing to it as amended.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to Rule XXXIV, on page 29. It has been adopted, as I understand; I believe all the rules have been adopted now; but it has been suggested to me, and I think there is force in the suggestion, that there ought to be two amendments to that rule, one admitting to the floor the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives and the other admitting to the floor the assistant librarian having in charge the law library, as Senators have frequently to send for him and need him for a moment or two, and certainly he is a gentleman who never troubles the Senate by his presence unless he is sent for.

Mr. SHERMAN. He is admitted under the general rule as an employé of the Senate, is he not?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. HALE. Is he not an officer of the Senate?

Mr. FRYE. He is not an officer of the Senate. I do not mean the assistant librarian of the Senate library, but the assistant librarian of the Library of Congress in charge of the law library. He is not an officer of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Is the Librarian admitted?

Mr. FRYE. The Librarian is admitted.

Mr. HALE. I think he ought to be, but I do not see his name here.

Mr. FRYE. The Librarian is admitted. "Librarian of Congress," within five lines of the bottom of the rule.

Mr. HALE. I see; at the bottom. I think this assistant ought to be admitted also.

Mr. FRYE. The only way to reach it is I think by unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to amend the clause reading "Private secretaries of Senators, duly appointed in writing; and the Librarian of Congress," by adding thereto the words "and the assistant librarian in charge of the law library."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to amend Rule XXXIV by adding the words he has just stated. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask why should not the person in charge of the document-room be admitted?

Mr. FRYE. He is one of the officers of the Senate, and is admitted of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Now I ask unanimous consent to amend the third clause, "Members of the House of Representatives and the Clerk of the House," by inserting after the word "and" and before "the Clerk" the words "Sergeant-at-Arms," it being rather important sometimes that he may be permitted to come into the Senate Chamber when a good many members of the House have been admitted under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to amend the third paragraph of Rule XXXIV by adding after the word "Representatives" and before "and" the words "the Sergeant-at-Arms;" so as to read:

Members of the House of Representatives, the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the Clerk of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose the Senator from Maine has more experience in that line than anybody else, and I am willing to follow his suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none. It is agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I desire now to ask the President of the Senate, not strictly a parliamentary question but a question, whether or not an enacting clause is necessary to these rules? ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any written report from the committee?

Mr. FRYE. There is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a resolution that the rules be agreed to?

Mr. FRYE. There is none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair is now informed at the desk, the Journal has been kept as if this was a bill. The whole thing can be accomplished, the Chair thinks, by the Senator from Maine moving, now the rules being perfected, that the whole body as perfected and amended be adopted. That will stand in the place of a resolution and keep the Journal in proper form.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, then I will move that this body of rules be the rules of the United States Senate and that they take effect from and after the 20th day of January instant; that is one week from Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine mean "from and after" or "on and after?"

Mr. FRYE. "On and after."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine the operation of the rule as to the appointment of committees. The present rule provides that committees shall be chosen at the beginning of each session, as therein ordered. The new rule provides that the committees shall be chosen at the beginning of each Congress to serve through the Congress. So this rule when adopted will leave strictly no provision for the selection of committees at the beginning of the next session, because it would not come in under either body of rules, the present rule being repealed and the new one not providing for an appointment at that time. Should there not be some declaration of the Senate, either by way of an order or something else, which will indicate whether it is expected that the present committees will serve through this Congress or will be reappointed at the next session?

Mr. FRYE. I suppose that the present committees having been appointed would serve at any rate through the session for which they were appointed, and that if it became necessary to reappoint them for the other session of Congress it can be done by resolution without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. HOAR. It would be better to determine now whether it is understood they shall be reappointed or not.

Mr. FRYE. I understand under these rules that, so far as the appointment of committees is concerned, it will not be made under these rules until the beginning of another Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Then there is no rule for the appointment of committees at the next session.

Mr. FRYE. Except it may be done by a resolution; and, if it were not done, the committees would hold over.

Mr. HALE. It is always done by resolution.

Mr. HOAR. It is done by resolution under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Rules also reported joint rules for the Senate and House of Representatives, to be found on page 45 of the report. I should like to take them up so that they may be the unfinished business, and if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to proceed with a bill that he has, then yield to him in order to do it. The joint rules will probably provoke little or no discussion and will occupy but a very short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint rules reported from the Committee on Rules, on page 45 of the printed report.

Mr. FRYE. There may be no objection to them at all, and I should like to have them read now, as there seems to be nothing else this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint rules proposed by the Committee on Rules will be read. Does the Senator from Maine desire to have them acted upon one by one or to be read through?

Mr. FRYE. Separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the joint rules be acted on separately as they are read. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator in charge of this measure whether there is anything more in these proposed joint rules in the way of variations from the former joint rules than may appear in italics as heretofore in considering the Senate rules?

Mr. FRYE. The changes made by the committee to these rules do not appear in italics, but on page 49 will be found memoranda of the proposed code of joint rules explaining each one. There are one or two very important changes, and only one or two. Many of the old joint rules have been left out, because they had become useless as found by experience and have been suspended at every Congress. I will call the Senate's attention to the fact that under "Messages," in rule 2, the committee propose the following:

2. All messages from the President of the United States or the other House, all reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and all communications addressed to the Senate or House of Representatives, shall be placed in order on the table of the presiding officer of each House.

3. It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting, to lay before the Senate or House of Representatives, as the case may be, all messages on their respective tables, for reference to appropriate committees, or for such other action as may be deemed proper.

That is the Senate rule under which we act now. It is not a House rule, and never has been. All bills, messages, &c., going from the Senate to the House go to what is known as the Speaker's table, and there is but one way to reach the Speaker's table, and that is by a majority vote. The result is that, as I have known myself, two hundred different measures passed by the Senate after careful consideration were lying on the Speaker's table on the day of final adjournment, never having been referred to a committee or having received the slightest consideration. This is an important request in the shape of a rule to the House that they will treat our business as we treat theirs.

Mr. BAYARD. That is very important doubtless, but it modifies the action of the House, and not of the Senate as heretofore.

Mr. FRYE. Yes. On general appropriation bills, Rule IV (I am only calling attention to matters of real importance), we propose to the House a rule which corresponds with the rule of the Senate against general legislation on appropriation bills. In Rule XI, relating to the Joint Committee on the Library, there is a provision which authorizes the Senate portion of the Library Committee to act during vacation, which is necessary. In the rule regarding conferences there have been some changes, but nothing of great importance. The committees of conference are confined to the matters in dispute between the two Houses; the appointment of the committees is provided for without any motion, and the proposed rule provides for a report in detail, as much as may be necessary for the information of the body to whom the report is made, to be made by each committee of conference. My own impression is that there is nothing in the proposed joint rules to which the Senate could possibly object, and that it would be of very great benefit to our legislation if the House would adopt what we have proposed to them.

Mr. BAYARD. I certainly hope they may adopt the matter of not amending appropriation bills by general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that each of the joint rules be acted upon as it is read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The first joint rule will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

I.—ORGANIZATION.

At the commencement of each Congress and of each session thereafter, it shall on motion be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to communicate promptly to the other House notice of the appearance of a quorum and of the organization of their respective Houses for the transaction of business, which notice shall be in writing and be duly attested by each of said officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the joint rule which has just been read.

The rule was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next proposed joint rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows;

II.—MESSAGES.

1. All messages between the two Houses shall be communicated by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, or by clerks designated by them for that purpose, which messages shall be announced at the door of each House by the Doorkeeper or his assistant, and shall be communicated to the Chair by the person by whom they may be sent.

2. All messages from the President of the United States or the other House, all reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and all communications addressed to the Senate or House of Representatives, shall be placed in order on the table of the presiding officer of each House.

3. It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting, to lay before the Senate or House of Representatives, as the case may be, all messages on their respective tables, for reference to appropriate committees, or for such other action as may be deemed proper.

4. All bills, joint and concurrent resolutions, referred to committees under the foregoing clause, shall be printed, unless otherwise ordered at the time of reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this rule.

The rule was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next proposed joint rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

III.—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

All bills, joint resolutions, or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill or joint resolution has commenced.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the consent of the Senate to go back for a moment to the third clause of the second rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to the third clause of the second rule for consideration as if it had not been already adopted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the chairman if the third clause of the second rule is in force in the Senate or in either branch?

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is that it is in force in the Senate and that it is acted upon every day.

Mr. HOAR. What is the present rule?

Mr. FRYE. If there is not any rule of the Senate touching it it has been the constant practice.

Mr. HOAR. I think it is merely a matter of unanimous consent; is it not? I inquire of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, on turning to Rule VIII, page 133 of the Manual, will find the following:

8. The first hour of daily sessions shall be designated as the morning hour, during which the order of business shall be as follows:

First. After the Journal is read, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the Senate, and such bills, joint resolutions, and other messages from the House of Representatives as may remain upon his table from any previous day's session undisposed of.

Mr. HOAR. My inquiry was directed to the point I will now state. It is absolutely impossible, it seems to me from my experience in the House, that this joint rule will ever be accepted there. The effect of it would be to require the Speaker of the House on the last day of the session to lay before the House for its action a new debatable subject which would thrust out whatever matter might be up in the House, giving it priority of all pending orders, all appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is mistaken in relation to that. During the last six days of the session in the House, in order to meet just such contingencies all rules are open to suspension on motion.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, on motion of course.

Mr. FRYE. In the House of Representatives a motion to suspend the rules is always in order during the last six days of a session, and almost all the business of the House is done by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be without debate.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that a single objection ought to prevent the right of the Chair. The question of reference here, as in the House, except when the previous question attaches, is debatable always; and the effect of this rule is to interpose any number of debatable questions. It is not confined even to the first hour in its operation in the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; immediately after the reading and approving of the Journal. My greatest fear is that we shall not get half that we ask for from the House in this very rule. If we get half we shall have gained a great deal. We are asking here for everything that we give. If they will grant back from the House one-half of what we ask, we shall be so much better off than we are now. My recollection of my House experience rather indicates to me that there is no need of any Senator taking care of them in that direction.

Mr. HOAR. It is limited to the morning hour in our present rule. The proposed rule extends the consideration of these matters until they are disposed of, if through the entire day. The matter was suddenly called to my attention, and I raised the question for the consideration of the chairman of the committee. So far as this rule is new anywhere, it is obvious that it thrusts before this body an unlimited number of debatable questions, displacing all the pending business, whatever it may be. The only change, so far as it affects the Senate, is that that displacement, under the existing rules, is limited to the morning hour, and at the expiration of the morning hour the pending business goes on. Under the new rule the matter must be laid before the House by the presiding officer through the entire day until disposed of. It is often that a very important parliamentary struggle arises over the right of way, especially at the close of a session, and it seems to me that this rule, as a rule affecting the Senate, should be limited, as the existing rule is, to the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the third clause of joint rule number 2, which has been open by unanimous consent for further consideration. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOAR. The difficulty is in making an amendment which will be applicable here and also be applicable in the other House.

Mr. FRYE. They have a morning hour, but we do not have a morning hour under the new rules.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert, if the chairman of the committee approves, after the word "sitting," in the third line of the third clause, the words "the morning hour remaining unexpired."

Mr. INGALLS. There is to be no morning hour under the new rule. The "morning business" is the term that is employed, and the old segregation of the hour between 12 and 1 has been abolished, so that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will not accomplish what he desires.

Mr. HOAR. The term "morning hour" is the technical phrase in the old rule to which I refer. The criticism of the Senator from Kansas is correct. I will substitute the words "the time allotted for morning business remaining unexpired."

Mr. FRYE. I do not conceive that to be necessary. This really is simply for reference to the appropriate committees of the business which comes from one branch to the other. It can not occupy long at the longest, and under the rules of the House my recollection is that the question of reference to a committee is not debatable. I think that about every question that would arise under the rules of the House is not a debatable question.

Mr. HOAR. It certainly is a debatable question here, because we have very few undebatable questions. That is not one, and it is certainly a very serious change, affecting possibly the interests of very important measures whenever by any new regulation we authorize the displacement as of right of pending business which a majority of the Senate may desire to take up. Many Senators know how often very important measures which they are anxious to press upon the consideration of the Senate are thrust over and finally defeated by the use of the right of way for other business. Business is frequently taken up not on account of its own merits alone, but for the sake of its occupying the time which otherwise would be taken in the passage of a measure which some Senators deem hurtful.

Under this proposed rule if twenty or fifty bills come over from the House at once, the debatable question of referring each one of those bills is first in order during the entire day until disposed of; so that the business which is pending, which has the right at the expiration of the morning hour, is necessarily displaced. The morning hour of course has the effect to limit the morning business within the two hours; and it does no harm to put half a dozen new subjects, which have a right there, if necessary for the convenient transaction of business; but my protest is against extending that right through the entire day.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator kindly repeat his proposition of amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "sitting," in line 3 of clause 3 of Rule II, it is proposed to insert:

And during the time allotted for morning business remaining unexpired.

So as to make the clause read:

3. It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting, and during the time allotted for morning business remaining unexpired, to lay before the Senate and House of Representatives, as the case may be, all messages on their respective tables, for reference to appropriate committees, or for such other action as may be deemed proper.

Mr. FRYE. I am not going to be captious about it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the third clause of the second joint rule as amended.

The clause as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Evidently we cannot finish this business to-night, and it is necessary to have an executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 24 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. RANSOM, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

PRINTING OF THE RULES.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That 1,000 copies of the rules as agreed to by the Senate be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate, and that the Secretary be directed to cause to be prepared an index to accompany them.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 14, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. O. H. TIFFANY, D. D., of New York city.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1884.

SIR: On the 15th of June, 1880, this Department, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information in regard to the claim of the United States against the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, transmitted certain documents to the President of the Senate, among which were three printed volumes, which the Secretary requested might be returned in order to be restored to their appropriate places among the records.

As those volumes are now needed for immediate use, I have the honor to request that they may be returned.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has examined the letter of transmittal of three years ago in regard to these documents, and finds that the three printed volumes were stated in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury as belonging to the files of that Department, and were sent as originals on account of the length of time required for copying, and he expressed the request that they be returned. The Chair, however, did not feel at liberty to return the printed volumes without the direction of the Senate. If there be no objection, the Secretary will be directed to return the printed volumes mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of the Commission on Navy-yards, appointed in pursuance of the act of August 5, 1882; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 8th instant, a statement showing the date of construction, original cost, and total expense for repairs since their construction of vessels borne on the Navy Register in November, 1883; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, submitting a supplemental report of the surveyor-general of Arizona Territory on private land claim No. 7, known as Tumacaeori y Calabazus; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, inclosing reports from Majors W. McFarland and J. W. Barlow upon examinations and surveys of the harbors of Black Rock, Stamford, Duck Island, and Madison, Conn., and of Peconic River and Southold Harbors, New York, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of December 4, 1883, copies of documents and correspondence relating to leases of lands in the Indian Territory to citizens of the United States for cattle grazing and other purposes

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the chairmen of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Public Lands to this letter. The Chair is not clear as to which committee the letter and the accompanying papers should be sent, whether to Indian Affairs or to Public Lands.

Mr. DAWES. What is the purport of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is respecting cattle leases, &c., reported upon by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in part and the Secretary of the Interior, which led the Chair to doubt as to the reference it should take.

Mr. DAWES. It relates to the question of leasing Indian lands?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair infers from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior that it embraces that among other things.

Mr. DAWES. I insist upon it that that belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter, with the accompanying papers, will be printed, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from O. C. Marsh, president of the National Academy of Sciences, Washington, D. C., transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of law, a report of the operations of the National Academy of Sciences during the past year; which, on motion of Mr. HAWLEY, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

HEATING AND VENTILATING SENATE CHAMBER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, transmitting a supplemental report of the chief engineer on heating and ventilating the Senate Chamber; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of A. L. Barber, William Birney, and 72 other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. I am in receipt of very many papers numerously signed by respectable and earnest citizens of Massachusetts of such an informal nature that I am hardly certain what ought to be done with them. They are headed "A Memorial to Congress," and evidently were intended as such, but consist in fact of a letter addressed to me, requesting me to use my influence to secure from the Committee on Appropriations a favorable report for an appropriation for an industrial training school at Sitka and for common schools at such points as may be designated by the United States Commissioner of Education. I have no doubt these papers were intended as a memorial to Congress; and I ask leave to present them as such and have them referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

I desire also in this connection to assure my constituents who have signed these papers and others that there can be no one more solicitous than the Committee on Appropriations for carrying out the very purpose indicated in the memorial. Some years ago the Committee on Appropriations reported, and there was adopted, an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of carrying out this very measure. No part of that money has been expended; I do not know for what reason. The Committee on Appropriations are already disposed to appropriate money for the education of the Indians in Alaska and all other Indians just so far as it is possible for the executive department of the Government to properly, efficiently, and economically expend it. I ask that the papers may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks leave to present sundry letters addressed to him, but intended, as he thinks, to have been in the nature of a memorial, and that they be sent to the Committee on Appropriations. If there be no objection, they will be received and so referred.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on Territories have under consideration a bill now covering many of the points that are there mentioned, if I caught the statement of the Senator correctly.

Mr. DAWES. I have no choice to which committee they go——

Mr. GARLAND. I suggest the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES. As it was a special request to me to use my influence with the Committee on Appropriations, and as the appropriation must come from that committee, I thought proper that the papers should go there.

Mr. GARLAND. The chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. HARRISON] has a bill now covering these very points, and as he is absent from the city, I will ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Territories, at least for the time being.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Committee on Territories have reported a bill on this very proposition.

Mr. DAWES. I have no choice as to the committee, but whatever appropriation shall come must come from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts acquiesce in the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from California states that the Committee on Territories have already discharged their duty in that respect. I suggest that the papers should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that these papers be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That order will be entered if there be no objection. It is entered.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Rush R. Shippen, William A. Bartlett, and other residents of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of B. H. Warner, W. W. Curtis, and other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Kansas and Nebraska, praying that the body of land known as the Oklahoma lands, in the Indian Territory, may be opened to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Western Central Stock Association, recommending certain modifications of the public land laws; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of George M. Wakefield and other citizens of Oshkosh, Wis., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 691) to confirm and declare legal the acts of certain officers of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Alexander McDonald and 36 other residents of Fond du Lac, Wis., praying Congress to relieve certain persons who have purchased land inside the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad grant in Michigan by declaring their titles valid; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VEST. I present the petition of Henry Ames & Co., Francis Whitaker & Sons, and others, pork-packers and dealers in meat, of Saint Louis, Mo., praying for legislation which will protect their interest and that of other dealers against the measures recently adopted by France and Germany to prevent the importation into those countries of American meats. The petition is very brief and I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents a petition of sundry citizens of that State, praying for legislation on the subject of the action of some foreign countries relating to products of the United States and asks that the petition be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it will be reported.

The petition was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned, all of whom are interested either as packers or dealers in the hog product and doing business in the city of Saint Louis, Mo., would respectfully ask for such legislation as will protect this interest from the unjust prohibition now being practiced by both Germany and France against the people of the United States.

It is useless to appeal to these nations in any other way than by such legislation as will teach them to respect the rights and interests of American citizens engaged in the import trade of pork and other meats into those countries. We therefore respectfully urge the immediate necessity of such legislation on our part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred, on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to the Committee on Finance, if there be no objection.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that that subject by petition or resolution has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they are now considering it. Perhaps the petition had better go to that committee.

Mr. VEST. I acquiesce in the suggestion. Let it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS. I present the petition of J. T. Brown, of Nashville, Tenn., administrator of the estate of Henry S. French, praying for the proceeds of the sales of certain cotton and property of his intestate. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, to accompany the bill upon the same subject which was a few days ago referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of J. S. and E. S. Haltom, administrators of Nathan Haltom, deceased, of Madison County, Tennessee, praying compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SLATER presented a petition of citizens of Columbia County, Oregon, praying for the forfeiture of unearned lands granted to the Oregon Central Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GARLAND presented a petition of the mayor and citizens of Hot Springs, Ark., praying for an appropriation of $500,000 for the improvement of Hot Springs reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PALMER. I present the petition of Robert Cutler, E. Crofton Fox, Charles Fox, S. W. Osterhout, Ira W. Gilbert, Thomas S. Freeman, and O. R. Wilmarth, citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., declaring that they bought lands of the Government located in Northern Michigan in good faith, supposing them to be public lands subject to sale, but which now prove to be within an old railroad grant, and praying relief by the passage of Senate bill 691. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. 849) for the relief of George W. Ira; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 402) for the completion of the Capitol terraces and the stairways connected therewith, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1050) to provide for the exchange of 4 per cent. bonds for 3 per cent. bonds, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1051) to amend section 1 of an act approved March 9, 1878, granting pensions to surviving officers, soldiers, sailors, and their widows, of the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1052) to amend the pension law; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1053) for the relief of William Pfænder; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1054) authorizing the retirement of Bvt. Maj. Gen. William W. Averell, United States Army, with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1055) for the relief of Thomas C. Ellison; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1056) granting an increase of pension to Sally Mallory; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1057) for the relief of The Soldiers' Nebraska Town Site Association; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I have been requested to introduce a bill which is I suppose practically in the nature of a petition, but the person interested in the bill takes this mode of asking the action of the Senate. I have no knowledge in regard to the merits of the bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 1058) explanatory of an act directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie (or Ammahe) passed June 30, 1876; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1059) to increase the pension of Mohammed Kahn, otherwise John Ammahae; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1060) to regulate licenses in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1061) relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1062) to refund the assessments made under the administration of M. G. Emery while mayor of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1063) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1064) to restore John F. Lewis to the rank of first lieutenant Twenty-first United States Infantry and place him upon the retired-list; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1065) for the relief of David Morrow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1066) to pay certain expenses of the Eastern Band of the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1067) for the relief of Eugene Wells; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1068) giving a pension to Alexander Thompson, of Newton County, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1069) to extend the time for the payment of the tax on distilled spirits now in warehouse; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1070) to prohibit the Secretary of the Treasury from purchasing the bonds of the United States above their par value, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BECK. I ask that that bill lie on the table, and I shall call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1071) for the relief of James R. Howard, formerly assistant special agent Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1072) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, of Montgomery County, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1073) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOWEN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1074) to amend section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1075) to create a board of liquidation for the purpose of adjusting certain assessments for special improvement and redeeming certain outstanding certificates issued by the District of Columbia and the late corporation of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MAHONE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1076) granting to the district judge of the eastern district of Virginia specific compensation for specific services rendered by him; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1077) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1078) granting a pension to Caroline R. Hazeltine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1079) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Emily M. Wyman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1080) granting a pension to Mary M. Murray; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1081) granting a pension to Emma De Long; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1094) providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Carrabelle, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the Senate in the claim of the estate of Robert H. Montgomery be taken from the files and sent to the Committee on Claims, additional testimony having been submitted since the adverse report thereon was made.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Mrs. Eliza H. Powers be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the claim of S. W. Marston be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GOLD IN EXCHANGE FOR SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate as soon as may be the amounts of gold coin and bullion deposited in the Treasury, subtreasuries, and designated depositories of the United States in exchange for silver certificates, and for which silver certificates have been issued during the calendar years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883; or, if more convenient, during the fiscal years 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883, and during the first six months of the fiscal year 1884; and also whether there has been any refusal to receive such gold coin or bullion for silver certificates, and, if so, the reasons therefor.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution offered by the occupant of the chair, that the Senate now proceed to elect a President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the Senate now consider, under the order of resolutions, the resolution offered by Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, on the 13th day of December last, that the Senate now proceed to elect a President pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be laid before the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate now proceed to elect a President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit for adoption the following resolution in connection with the order just made:

Resolved, That HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, is hereby chosen President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I think the peculiar circumstances of the case justify me in saying a word in favor of this resolution. The gentleman named in the resolution is the Senator who has longest occupied a seat in this body of all those who are here associated with us. He has been five times elected by his State a member of the Senate and is now serving his fifth term. He has been many times elected by common consent President pro tempore of the Senate, and has faithfully and ably discharged the duties of that position whenever they have fallen to him. I think under these circumstances it would be a graceful act for the Senate, I hope with unanimity, to elect him President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, without meaning to dissent from the opinion expressed by the Senator from Ohio as to the qualifications, fitness, integrity, ability, and patriotism of the gentleman named in the resolution, I move to strike out the name of HENRY B. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, and to insert that of THOMAS F. BAYARD, of Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] moves to amend the resolution. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 1 of the resolution it is proposed to strike out the words "HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island," and to insert the words "THOMAS F. BAYARD, a Senator from the State of Delaware."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it. The amendment is disagreed to. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island will please come forward to the chair and receive the oath the law requires him to take.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President and Senators, I thank you for this distinguished honor. It would be affectation in me to say that it has come entirely unexpected, for I have been for some time aware of your kind and flattering purpose. It would be still greater affectation in me to deny that the acceptance of it would give me pride and pleasure. But the state of my health, which you all know is precarious, warns me not to assume any labor that I can consistently and honorably avoid; and although I would not hesitate to undertake any burden laid upon me by my brother Senators, not even at the peril of health, if it was thought that for any reason I could more appropriately perform it than another, yet I think it is no shirking of duty, no evidence of cowardly indolence in me, to decline a position which so many Senators can fill with equal and greater advantage to the Senate and to the country.

Therefore, Senators, with a heart overflowing with gratitude for all your kindness to me in this matter, I most respectfully decline the position to which you would elevate me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island declines to accept the office to which he has been elected. The Chair awaits a further motion for the execution of the order of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. There being no vacancy in the office, I think no further action is necessary. It seems to me so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair agrees with the view of the Senator from Ohio that there is no vacancy in the office, but the Senate has ordered to now proceed to elect, and as to whether the election that has taken place would be considered to be an execution of the order the Chair is in some doubt. Therefore the Chair has laid the matter before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. To save all question in regard to that matter I submit a resolution, although I think it is unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator might move to dispense with the further execution of the order, if he desires to pursue that course.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the resolution I offer be first read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, is hereby chosen President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the passage of that resolution would seem to imply that there was an actual vacancy, and would make it necessary to send a message to the President and to the House of Representatives, I do not think it is necessary. Therefore I move that further proceedings under the order just adopted relating to the election of a President pro tempore of the Senate be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BAYARD. The resolution is open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has withdrawn his resolution, and has made a motion that further proceedings under the order of the Senate be suspended.

Mr. BAYARD. Then the vote is not upon the adoption of the resolution just submitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. RANSOM. I simply rose to inquire of the Senator from Ohio in what way he proposes that the Senate can proceed without a President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a President pro tempore of the Senate. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is now President pro tempore of the Senate. If the Senators on the other side really desire to have him re-elected, of course it can be done as a matter of form; but I do not think it is proper to pursue that course, because it would involve the necessity of sending a message to the President and a message to the other House, and it would imply that there had been a point of time when the Senator from Vermont was not President pro tempore of the Senate. If the Senators on the other side desire to repeat the organization in the manner proposed by me in the first instance, I will follow their lead; but if not, I simply move to postpone any further execution of the order.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the raising of doubt by any Senator in regard to so grave and important a matter is enough to make it proper to remove the doubt. I entertain no doubt myself that if this resolution be withdrawn and the motion last suggested by the Senator from Ohio adopted, the organization of the Senate will be complete; but the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] implies that somebody hereafter or somebody now entertains a different opinion; and it seems to me therefore in order if there should be any grave constitutional exigency that the organization of the Senate shall be beyond a doubt, that it is the safest way to proceed as originally proposed by my honorable friend from Ohio. I trust, therefore, he will withdraw his suggestion and that we shall proceed to an election. It can certainly do no harm.

Mr. DAWES. I rise simply to add that the record of the Senate now stands that the Senate has indicated a desire to have some other gentleman its presiding officer, and therefore it is entirely proper that the record should be put right by proceeding to an election. I should not think it would be entirely comfortable for the presiding officer to continue after such a record, although everybody knows the circumstances under which it is made as having no bearing upon the propriety of his continuing in the office. But such is the record, and therefore it seems to me that it is very proper that we should proceed to the election of a President pro tempore after having indicated by a majority our desire to have some one else in the chair.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I differ toto cœlo from the opinion expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts on my right [Mr. DAWES]. It has always been held that the question of the Presidency pro tempore of the Senate was absolutely at the control of the body, and could be exercised hour by hour if a majority of the Senate so chose. I hold that the adoption of the resolution electing the honorable Senator from Rhode Island to the position vacated the chair so far as the previous incumbent was concerned, and that we are at this time, by the action of a majority of the body, without a President pro tempore. I should therefore hope that in the expression of the authority that has been so often asserted by this body with regard to its Presidency pro tempore, we now proceed to act upon the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio and elect the Senator named in that resolution to the place that is now vacant.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I differ, toto cœlo, from the Senator from Kansas in the idea that we have vacated the chair by the simple passage of that resolution. The Senator from Rhode Island has declined to accept the position. Until a new President pro tempore has accepted and qualified we have not put anybody in that place, and it is because the law of the Senate is that we hold this office every day in our power to change, and it is because simply the record stands so, without affecting the legal title of the Senator from Vermont to that office, that I suggested that it would be more comfortable by a new vote to show to the Senate that the Senator from Vermont was not holding office after a majority of the Senate had indicated a desire to have some one else. The Senator from Vermont understands that I do not mean to intimate that a majority of the Senate is not to-day just as well disposed to have him hold the place as they ever were, but the record does not carry this explanation along with it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas has truly stated the present condition of the Senate and that under our rules we are proceeding only by unanimous consent, that if strictly our rules were followed the Secretary of the Senate would now be presiding until a President pro tempore was again chosen. Our honored friend from Rhode Island was duly elected by the vote of the Senate its President pro tempore, and ipso facto that avoided any title that preceded his. As he has declined to assume the duties of that place there is a vacancy, and that vacancy ought in all regularity to be filled, and I doubt not will be filled in accordance with the suggestion of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio read just now before the Senate; that is by the election of the honorable Senator from Vermont. But I am clear that the presence of the Senator now in the chair is only by unanimous consent of the Senate and that it will be proper that we should proceed to vote to fill that place made vacant by the resignation or the declination of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, to remove a doubt where there is no doubt in my mind, I will renew again the resolution that I offered a while ago and withdraw the motion to suspend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his motion and offers a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, is hereby chosen President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. That resolution is open to amendment. I move to strike out the name of GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, and substitute the name of GEORGE H. PENDLETON, of Ohio; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Kansas a while ago stated that it had been the custom for this body to exercise its power of removing its presiding officer. I think that that rule has been one of very recent date. I think, sir, that the history of this body will show that the best minds that ever occupied seats in it were until a few years ago clearly of the opinion that when the Senate elected a Senator to the position of President pro tempore of this body in the absence of the Vice-President of the United States or when he entered the Presidential office, he should hold until the office became again constitutionally vacant. That was the deliberate opinion of no less a man than William H. Seward, expressed on this floor.

I happened to be somewhat a pioneer on this question when the then Senator from Illinois, Mr. Davis, was elected the last time over the head of my distinguished friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I then stated to the Senate my opinion that when the Senator from Delaware was elected there was a vacancy within the meaning of the Constitution, and when the Senator from Illinois was elected there was none. So in this case I was prepared to hear that the Senator from Vermont had resigned his position as presiding officer, in which case there would have been clearly a vacancy for the election that occurred a while ago; but there was no vacancy. Here is the language of the Constitution on the subject, which is very clear:

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

There was a vacancy when the Senator from Vermont was elected. There was no vacancy when the Senator from Rhode Island was elected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], upon which he asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is still absent, and I presume he has no other pair on this question. I shall therefore not vote. Were he present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the Chamber necessarily, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VAN WYCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am informed that a pair has been arranged between the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. I therefore vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bayard,	Colquitt,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Beck,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Garland,	Lamar,	Slater,
Call,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Vance,
Camden,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walker.

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lapham,	Palmer,
Anthony,	Frye,	Logan,	Pike,
Blair,	Hale,	McMillan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Wilson.

ABSENT—20.

Allison,	Farley,	Jonas,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	George,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Edmunds,	Harrison,	Pendleton,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS advanced to the chair and said: If the occupant of the chair will administer the oath to me, it will remove all question.

The oath of office was administered by Mr. GARLAND to Mr. EDMUNDS and subscribed by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate inform the President of the United States and the House of Representatives that the Senate has chosen Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. GROOME. I wish to announce that I was temporarily out of the Chamber when the vote was taken on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio. If I were present I should have voted for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to ask the unanimous assent of the Senate to call up Senate bill 227, in order that I may make some remarks upon the bill before it is referred to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to call up a bill the title of which will be reported by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 227) to establish a system of postal telegraphs in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he will yield to me that I may ask the Senate to pass a bill changing the time of holding the district court in Maine, a bill of three or four lines.

Mr. HILL. If the bill will not be discussed.

Mr. HOAR. It will not be.

DISTRICT COURT AT BANGOR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill called up by the Senator from Colorado will be temporarily laid aside, and the Senator from Massachusetts asks the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 686) to fix the time for holding the district court in the district of Maine at Bangor. It provides that the regular term of the district court of the district of Maine, now held at Bangor on the fourth Tuesday, shall hereafter be held on the first Tuesday, of June.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] now has the floor on the bill (S. 227) to establish a system of postal telegraphs in the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in the history of governments it has sometimes happened that functions first exercised by rulers for the sole purpose of extending and maintaining their power have become converted into instruments for the benefit and service of the people. To subdue and keep in subjection the provinces of the Roman Empire Europe was covered with military roads, which were afterward used as avenues of commerce and friendly intercourse between the descendants of the conquerors and conquered. Lines of couriers established to bear along these roads messages of emperors and military commanders were gradually superseded by systems of postal communication, in whose benefits the subject was permitted to share. In the course of time, as trade and intercourse developed, the share of the governed in the benefits of these systems became more and more important and that of the rulers comparatively more insignificant. For a time the privilege of carrying on the postal service was granted to the court favorites or farmed out for purposes of revenue. But these monopolies have long since been abolished, and civilized governments have everywhere themselves undertaken the service. In performing it they mainly act as agents of society, for the promotion of its happiness and prosperity, and not for their own aggrandizement. Even the direct raising of revenue is no longer a prime object, but only an incident of the service. The limits of political boundaries which confine the other functions of government have been by mutual consent broken over by the postal system, and it is now operating as a mighty force to bind together in amity the nations of the world. Upon governments considered as mere instruments for the preservation of the peace the effect of cheap and frequent postal communication has been to bring the people into closer relations, thus diminishing the chances of foreign and domestic troubles, and at the same time to make more easy the maintenance of their ordinary powers by stimulating and giving greater play to the productive forces from which the revenues to support these powers must be provided.

But who shall say what the effect has been upon the people themselves in their social and commercial relations? In anticipating the result of the introduction of the penny post in England Mr. O'Connell declared in Parliament that it would be impossible to exaggerate its benefits, and even if it would not pay the expenses of the post-office, he held that the government ought to make the sacrifice for the purpose of facilitating communication. Viscount Sandon insisted that the post-office was not a proper source of revenue, but ought to be used for the purpose of stimulating other sources of revenue. Mr. Goulburn admitted that it would ultimately increase the wealth and prosperity of the country. Sir Robert Peel said that great social and commercial advantages would arise from the change independent of financial considerations, and Mr. Wallace described it as one of the greatest boons that could be conferred on the human race. Lord Ashburton, speaking of a high-rate postage, said:

I think it is one of the worst taxes. We have, unfortunately, many taxes which have an injurious tendency, but I think few, if any, have so injurious a tendency as the tax upon the communication of letters.

And again:

It is, in fact, taxing the conversation of people who live at a distance from each other.

* * * * * * *

You might as well tax words spoken upon the royal exchange as the communications of various persons living in Manchester, Liverpool, and London. You cannot do it without checking the disposition to communicate very essentially.

In describing the results of the reform after its accomplishment, the following picture was drawn by Senator Sumner in debate in this body:

The smallest part of the result was in the revenue, except so far as this was advanced by the increased activity of the country, represented by the added millions of correspondence. Commerce and business were quickened infinitely, while the ties of social life were brightened and the heart was rejoiced. Here the testimony is complete. Tradesmen wrote to Rowland Hill, their benefactor, saying how their business had increased. Charles Knight, the eminent publisher, who did so much for the literature of the people, wrote that every branch of bookselling was stimulated, while the country seller was brought into daily communication with the London houses. The publisher of the polyglot Bible, in twenty-four languages, requiring a peculiar revision, declared that it could not have been printed but for penny postage. The secretary of the Parker Society, composed of church dignitaries and intelligent laymen, which has done so much for ecclesiastical literature by reprinting the works of early English reformers, stated that without penny postage the society could not have come into existence. Secretaries of other societies, literary and benevolent, wrote how their machinery had been improved; conductors of educational establishments testified that people were everywhere learning to write for the first time, in order to enjoy the benefits of untaxed correspondence, and that night classes of adults for this purpose were springing up in all large towns.

A leading advocate for the repeal of the corn laws gave it as his opinion that this reform must have waited but for penny postage; that through this ally it reached its triumph two years earlier than it otherwise could have done. All this is easy to believe; for penny postage lends itself to all knowledge and to every reform. Others wrote with rapture of its operations. The accomplished naturalist Professor Henslow, of Oxford, rejoiced over "its importance to those who cultivate science," and pictured the satisfaction of the humble people about his country parsonage "at the facility they enjoy of now corresponding with relatives," together with what he calls the "vast domestic comfort which the penny postage added to homes like his own." Miss Martineau declared the social advantages that were assured in her neighborhood. Rowland Hill himself, showing how much it had done for the poor, said "the postman has now to make long rounds through humble districts where heretofore his knock was rarely heard." And from the outlying Shetland Islands a visitor reported: "The Zetlanders are delighted with cheap postage. The postmaster told me that the increase in the number of letters was astonishing." But, perhaps, the heartfelt exultation was never better expressed than by the accomplished traveler Mr. Laing, when, after describing the Prussian system of education, and giving the palm to penny postage as "a much wiser and more effective educational measure," destined to be "the great historical distinction of the reign of Victoria," he proceeds to say that "every mother in the kingdom who has children earning their bread at a distance lays her head upon her pillow at night with a feeling of gratitude for this blessing." (Laing's Notes of a Traveler, chap. vi.) Such was the unbought tribute from all quarters—alike the cottage of the lowly and the home of the professor, the counting-house of the merchant and the activities of benevolence, business in its various forms and the commanding efforts of the political reformer, all, all confessing their debt to penny postage.

The increase of correspondence in Great Britain by the cheapening of postage was enormous. In 1840 (the first year) the number of letters more than doubled, and in 1856 the number of letters had grown to 778,393,803; and that of money-orders to 6,178,982, as against 75,907,572 letters, and 188,921 money-orders in the last year of the old system. In 1882 the letters numbered 1,229,354,800, and the money-orders 14,880,821. In addition to this 10,902,318 registered letters, 135,329 postal cards, 140,789,100 newspapers, and 271,038,700 book packages and circulars were carried by the mail in the United Kingdom. The number of letters per capita is shown by the report of the British postmaster-general to have increased from 3 in 1839 to 7 in 1840, 28 in 1872, and 35 in 1882.

While the increase of revenue was the result least considered when the reform was under consideration, yet the predictions of Mr. Cobden and of Rowland Hill in that regard were fully realized.

The net receipts of the British post-office had reached $6,000,000 in 1856 and in 1882 over $15,000,000. Yet it was of a reform which has produced such beneficent results that a noble lord then postmaster-general said in anticipation:

Of all the wild and visionary schemes I have ever heard of, it is the most extravagant.

In the United States the benefits derived from successive reductions of the postal rate have been not less astonishing. Prior to 1845 the rates for single letters were graded by distance as follows:

Not exceeding 30 miles, 6 cents.
Over 30 and not exceeding 80 miles, 10 cents.
Over 80 and not exceeding 150 miles, 12½ cents.
Over 150 and not exceeding 400 miles, 18¾ cents.
Over 400 miles, 25 cents.
And for double, treble, or quadruple letters in proportion.

Under these oppressive rates the limit of correspondence had apparently been reached, since the receipts of the Department remained about stationary for ten years prior to 1845, in which year, indeed, they were 13 per cent. less than in 1837. The first important reduction took place on the 1st of July, 1845, to 5 cents for distances under 300 miles and 10 cents for longer distances. So great was the impetus given to correspondence that the immediate loss of revenue was more than recovered in three years, and the receipts, which in the year ending January 30, 1845, had stood at $4,289,841, amounted in the year ending June 30, 1848, to $4,555,211.10. In three years more, 1851, it reached $6,410,-604.33.

Then came the sweeping reduction of 1851, namely, to 3 cents for single letters under 3,000 miles. The loss of revenue which this induced was much greater than that following the reduction of 1845, but it was more than recouped in four years. The revenue in the year ending June 30, 1855, was $6,642,146.13, and in 1860 it had reached $8,518,067.40. These figures may be roughly assumed to have represented about 250,000,000 letters in 1860.

No important reduction in the letter-postage has taken place since that time until the present fiscal year, and the increase has gone on more gradually, but still rapidly and surely. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, the sale of ordinary stamps and stamped envelopes for letters and circulars had reached about 1,340,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, the number was about 1,432,000,000.

But in 1873 a new feature was introduced into the postal system in the shape of 1-cent postal cards. With no advantages over letters in point of speedy transportation, and with the double disadvantage of smaller size and lack of secrecy against them, their sales have yet risen from 91,079,000 in 1874 to 379,516,750 in 1883, or an increase of more than fourfold in nine years. The whole of this vast increase of correspondence may be mainly attributed to the cheapness of communication.

It may well be said that the benefits to our people from a cheap and efficient postal service are incalculable. In conferring them our republican Government has merely carried out one of the purposes, and one of the most important purposes, for which it was created, and performed a service which could not properly, or indeed safely, be committed to any other agency.

When our forefathers separated from the mother country, there had long been in operation through the Colonies a system—although an imperfect system—of postal communication. Its direction was assumed by the Continental Congress in ordinances which declared its functions to be "the communicating intelligence with regularity and dispatch from one part to another of these United States." And by the Articles of Confederation the power of "establishing and regulating post-offices from one State to another" was expressly committed to Congress.

Although post-roads were not mentioned in the Articles of Confederation, the power to establish them was necessarily presumed, and by the act of October 18, 1782, an extended system of postal communication was put in operation. In the first draught of the Constitution there was a clause:

Congress shall have power to establish post-offices.

But the words "and post-roads" were added by a vote of the majority of the State delegations, and the amendment was afterward unanimously concurred in.

From the beginning the simple words of the Constitution "to establish post-offices and post-roads" have been given all the breadth of construction necessary to carry into effect the power which the clause granted. By its authority statutes have been passed under which thousands of officers and sworn agents have been appointed and paid by the Government to conduct and superintend the transportation of the mails.

"Post-roads" were not thought to mean merely the highways on land existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. On the contrary, in the first permanent act of Congress "to establish post-offices and post-roads within the United States," passed February 20, 1792, provision was made for the postal service "in packet-boats or vessels passing by sea to and from the United States or from one point to another therein." The act of February 27, 1813, authorized the Postmaster-General "to contract for carrying the mails of the United States in any steamboat or boats which are or may be established to ply between one post-town and another post-town." Penalties for the non-delivery of the mails within a certain time by persons employed on such boats were provided by the act of February 27, 1815, and by the act of March 23, 1823, it was enacted—

That all waters on which steamboats regularly pass from port to port shall be considered and established as post-roads, subject to the provisions contained in the several acts regulating the Post-Office establishment.

The act of March 25, 1864, required all citizens of the United States owners of vessels plying between the United States and foreign ports to carry the mails, and by various acts the post-office clause of the Constitution has been drawn upon to authorize, in part at least, the charter by Congress of lines of steamers between the United States and foreign countries. [15 Statutes, 229.] Under that clause alone the Postmaster-General has been authorized to conclude conventions with foreign governments for the exchange of postal correspondence, and to make contracts with private persons for the carriage of the United States mails through foreign territory. The navigable waters of the United States, and canals and plank roads within their limits, have been declared post-roads while the mails were carried thereon. And by a sweeping clause in the act of July 7, 1838, it has been enacted "that each and every railroad within the limits of the United States which now is or hereafter may be made and completed shall be a post-road."

Railroads thus chartered as postal agents of the Government have been required to furnish special cars for the convenient transportation of the mails and otherwise to provide for their prompt transmission and delivery. On the other hand, they have incidentally received valuable franchises from the postal legislation of Congress. Their bridges across navigable streams have been declared post-roads, and the Supreme Court has held that such declaration made them legal structures.

In the foregoing instances, as in most others, the power to establish post-roads was used merely to designate existing routes over which the mails should be carried, but in the practice of the Government the power has by no means been confined to such designation. Under the administration of Jefferson, authority was given the President and exercised by him to cause to be opened roads in Georgia, in the Indian country, and from Nashville, Tenn., to Natchez, Miss. [2 Statutes, 397.] At the same session he was authorized to regulate the laying out and making a road from Cumberland, in the State of Maryland, to the State of Ohio. The road was constructed and appropriations were made for its maintenance down to the year 1838.

Many acts were also passed for the repair of old post-roads in the States and for surveying new roads. The practice was discontinued for two reasons: First, because the invention of railroads made its continuance unnecessary; and, second, because the construction by the General Government of roads through the States which might and would be used more largely for other purposes than for postal communication seemed to be of doubtful policy. It was the fear that such schemes of internal improvement would interfere with the rights of the States that led to the several vetoes of Presidents Madison, Monroe, and Jackson. In his message of the 4th of May, 1822, vetoing a bill for the repair of the Cumberland road, Mr. Monroe did, indeed, argue that the words "to establish post-offices and post-roads" conveyed merely a power to designate existing places and existing roads between and over which the mail should be carried, but although the particular bill was not passed over his veto, yet, as before seen, his views did not prevail in subsequent Congresses.

So far as the authority to construct roads is concerned it has not yet been directly passed upon by the courts, but the word "establish," as used with reference to post-offices, has within the past ten years been given the widest possible meaning by the Supreme Court of the United States. For many years it had been the practice for the Government to purchase sites in the States and to erect its own buildings at the more important post-offices. In the appropriation act of June 10, 1872, provision was made "to commence the erection of a building at Cincinnati, Ohio, for the accommodation of the United States courts, custom-house, United States depository, post-office, internal-revenue and pension offices, and for the purchase at private sale or by condemnation of ground for a site therefor."

Under this act, for the first time in the history of the Government, it was sought to secure the condemnation of the necessary land by proceedings in the United States courts. The proceedings were resisted, and the case was brought to the Supreme Court, which said in the course of its opinion:

When the power to establish post-offices and to create courts within the States was conferred upon the Federal Government, included in it was authority to obtain sites for such offices and for court-houses, and to obtain them by such means as were known and appropriate. The right of eminent domain was one of these means well known when the Constitution was adopted and employed to obtain lands for public uses. Its existence, therefore, in the grantee of that power ought not to be questioned. (Kohl vs. The United States, 91 U. S. R., 372.)

If under the power "to establish post-offices" the Government may acquire lands in the States by condemnation through its own agencies, it can not be doubted that it may by similar means acquire whatever may be necessary to enable it "to establish post-roads," and that the courts will so decide if the occasion shall ever arise. It may be presumed that the power would never have been questioned if its exercise had not, as before shown, involved the establishment of roads to be used for the carriage of freight and passengers. If, therefore, there had existed in the early days a method of communication adapted only to the wants of the postal service, surely no one would have doubted the authority of the Government to avail itself of that method under the post-office clause of the Constitution. A pneumatic tube under-ground, or a balloon route through the air, would have been held to be a post-road equally with the common highway or the railway on land, the navigable rivers and canals, or the trackless waters of the ocean.

About the time that Congress declared that railroads were post-roads, and while the people of Great Britain were still rejoicing over the establishment of the penny post, an invention was perfected whose sole use and object was to carry out the functions of the post-office as described in the ordinances of the Continental Congress, namely, "the communicating of intelligence with regularity and dispatch from one part to another." The inventor brought it to the attention of Congress, and an act was passed March 3, 1843, appropriating $30,000 to test the practicability of establishing a system of electro-magnetic telegraphs by the United States. A line was built from Washington to Baltimore, and placed in charge of the Postmaster-General. For three years it was maintained by the Government, and its revenues were directed "to be placed in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Post-Office Department in the same manner as other revenues from postages." But the people were slow to recognize its advantages, and its workings were so imperfect that it was thought to be unavailable for long distances. Under the authority of the act of June 19, 1846, the line was sold to private parties, and the invention passed from the hands in which it had been properly placed, and under which alone the public could ever hope to realize its full benefit.

It may be doubted whether the statute-books contain a piece of more ill-advised legislation than this act of 1846, an act which has already cost the people a hundred million dollars in the excessive cost of telegrams, which has produced most serious evils in the past, and which, unless its consequences can now be checked, may be fraught with yet more serious evils in the future.

The act was not passed without earnest protest. In 1845 the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives made a report [No. 187, second session Twenty-eighth Congress], in which, after asserting with emphasis the constitutional right and duty of the Government to adopt for the benefit of the people this new system of postal communication, the committee said:

Should the arrangements into which he (the inventor) may find it necessary to enter with private individuals or associations stipulate exclusive rights in their favor, it is manifest how greatly Government and people would lie at their mercy. Having in their hands the monopoly of such a medium of intelligence on the important lines, they could make such use of their advantages over the Government and the community as would at length enable them to exact their own terms as the price of the surrender of their exclusive right; for the truth can not be too often repeated, or too deeply impressed, in relation to this subject, that the people will never submit long to the mischiefs and discredit of the public post being outstripped by any private monopoly or establishment whatever. The loss of revenue will co-operate with the complaints and sufferings of the people to do what were better done at once, namely, to establish the telegraph in connection with and as a branch of the post-office.

And again:

The committee might easily add to the views and arguments which they have now presented others of a highly commanding character, especially those which relate to the extreme value of which the magnetic telegraph would be in the emergencies of war, and its singular adaptedness to render our system of Government easily and certainly maintainable over the immense space from the Atlantic to the Pacific which our territory covers. Doubt has been entertained by many patriotic minds how far the rapid, full, and thorough intercommunication of thought and intelligence so necessary to a people living under a common representative republic could be expected to take place throughout such immense bounds. That doubt can no longer exist. It has been resolved and put an end to forever by the triumphant success of the electro-magnetic telegraph of Professor Morse, as already tested by the Government.

These views were concurred in by the Postmaster-General of that day, Mr. Johnson, who described the telegraph as an agent vastly superior to any other ever devised by the genius of man for the diffusion of intelligence, and said:

The use of an instrument so powerful for good or evil can not with safety to the people be left in the hands of private individuals uncontrolled by law.

The states of the continent of Europe were the first to appreciate the advantages of governmental control of the telegraph. They received the inventor as a public benefactor, covered him with honors, and from the beginning they assumed the erection and management of the telegraph lines. It may be said that in taking control of the telegraphs the monarchical governments of the Old World were actuated as much by the desire to use them for the maintenance of authority as by the advantages which they offered for the service of the people. To a certain extent this is doubtless true, but it is none the less true that the people have reaped the most solid benefits, and that the tendency has been rather to liberalize government than to maintain arbitrary power. From the various administrative departments to which it was at different times confided the management of the telegraphs in the most important states has been transferred to the post-office and amalgamated with that establishment, and by successive reduction of rates the system has been brought within the reach of the poorest classes, and at the same time, through the increase of correspondence thus produced, it has, in the majority of cases, been made self-sustaining.

Moreover, the greatest progress and the best management have alike been shown in those countries where the forms of government are most liberal, as in Switzerland and Belgium. The area of these countries is so small (the former covering only about 16,000 square miles and the latter only about 11,330 square miles), that the telegraph has the least possible advantage over mail communication. A few hours will carry a letter from one end of either country to the other, but the management of the telegraphs has been such that their small margin of usefulness has been availed of to the utmost. Under the tariff of one franc, or less than twenty cents for twenty words, the number of internal messages in Belgium grew from 80,216 in 1860 to 332,721 in 1865. On the 1st of December of that year the rate was reduced one-half, and in 1866 the number of messages increased to 692,936, or more than 100 per cent. In 1882 the number was 2,225,094, in addition to 579,931 international messages sent and 620,923 international messages received, and 3,095,177 messages in the service of telegraph, post-office, railroad, navy, and other government departments. In Switzerland, under a like tariff of one franc for twenty words, the number of internal messages had in 1867 reached 397,333. The rate was reduced to half a franc on the 1st of January, 1868. In the very first year of the reduction the number of messages increased to 798,186, or more than 100 per cent.; and since that time it has grown to 1,837,385 in 1881, in addition to 879,727 international messages sent and received.

These figures alone would seem to be sufficient to show the popular character of European systems as illustrated in these two countries; but that character further appears from the classifications made by Belgian and Swiss administrations of the nature of the telegrams in 1872 and prior years, from which it appears that more than half the telegrams in these countries were on social affairs. In 1872 the proportion of social messages in Belgium was over 55 per cent., and in Switzerland 61 per cent. of the total number. In striking contrast with this is the statement which has been made on good authority, that of the 40,000,000 messages which passed over the wires in this country last year less than 12 per cent. were on social matters.

In the other countries on the continent the progress of the telegraph has varied with the character of the people and their institutions, the rates charged, and the advantages offered by telegraphing over postal communication.

In France, under the tariff of 1858 of 2 francs fixed and 10 centimes per myriameter (about 6 miles) for twenty words, 1 franc in the same department, and 1½ francs between adjacent departments, the number of messages in 1861 was only 734,352. January 1, 1862, the rates were reduced to 2 francs per twenty words, without regard to distance, and 1 franc in the same department. The number of messages rose to 1,291,774 in 1862. In 1868 the rates were reduced to 1 franc throughout France and one-half franc within a department; and the number of messages increased from 2,916,734 in that year to 4,085,408 in 1869.

Since the establishment of the republic the progress has been most rapid. In 1878 the service was amalgmated with that of the post-office, and in 1880 the tariff was reduced to 5 centimes, or less than one-half cent per word, with a minimum tariff of 50 centimes. The result of this reduction appears in the increase of internal messages from 13,998,736 in 1879 to 21,210,510 in 1882. In the last-named year the French sent and received also 3,379,620 international messages. For 1 franc messages may now be sent from the north of France to Algiers, a distance of 2,000 miles.

In Germany the tariff was for a long time based upon distance. Under this rate the number of internal messages in 1872 was 6,783,533 and the receipts from internal messages were $1,304,373, showing an average receipt per message (which of course exceeds the average tariff for the minimum number of words) of about 20 cents. In 1875 the service was amalgamated with the post-office so completely that no distinction is now made in the statistics as to the salaries paid employés who perform the postal and telegraphic services.

In 1878 Bavaria and Wirtemberg, which formerly maintained separate telegraphic administations, were brought into the imperial system. The present tariff in Germany is 1½ cents per word, with a fixed rate of 5 cents per message additional. For local messages the tariff is one-half cent per word. The number of internal messages in 1882 was 12,303,516.

While the progress of telegraphic correspondence in Germany is thus seen to have been less rapid, so far as the reduction in rates and increase of messages are concerned, the management of the system in other respects leaves little to be desired; and further reduction may be expected to place the system on the same popular basis as in the other countries. In 1876 an extensive system of under-ground lines was commenced, which now extends to 221 cities and aggregates 3,400 miles of line, carrying 23,318 miles of conducting wires.

In Great Britain the telegraph was at first controlled by private parties. As early as 1854, however, it was proposed by Mr. Thomas Allen, a well-known electrician, to annex the system to the general post-office. In 1856 Mr. Baines, an officer of the post-office department, submitted a plan for that purpose to the lords of the treasury. In 1861, Mr. Ricardo, formely a member of Parliament, forwarded to the chancellor of the exchequer a memorandum "in support of the expediency of the telegraphic communication of the kingdom being placed in the hands of Her Majesty's Government," which was referred to the post-office officials, but did not receive immediate attention. The question, however, soon grew to be one of popular interest, and in 1865 the Edinburgh chamber of commerce appointed a committee to consider it, which reported in favor of the proposition. This was followed by a petition from the association of chambers of commerce of the United Kingdom to both houses of Parliament. The post-office department, through Mr. Scudamore, one of its officials, then commenced a thorough investigation of the subject. In this investigation it was ascertained that many important districts were unprovided with telegraphic facilities, and that the rates, although apparently yielding only a fair profit to the companies, were unreasonably high. Competition had been tried by a company made up of stockholders directly interested in cheap telegraphy which had established a uniform rate of 1 shilling, but it was unable to maintain this rate, although the old companies still prospered on the tariff between points not affected by the competition. In July, 1865, the rates had been increased to one shilling and sixpence between 100 and 200 miles and 2 shillings beyond 200 miles.

In Mr. Scudamore's report the success of the postal telegraph of Belgium and Switzerland was adverted to, as well as that of the system of the colony of Victoria, where the telegraph had for some time been under the control of the post-office. It was shown that the proportion of telegrams to letters in the United Kingdom had ranged from 1 to 439 in 1855 to 1 to 121 in 1866, while in Switzerland the proportion had been 1 to 84 in 1860 and 1 to 69 in 1866.

In Belgium, after the reduction in telegraph tolls from 1 franc to one-half franc, the proportion rose from 1 to 73 in 1865 to 1 to 37 in 1866. If this proportion had obtained in the United Kingdom there would in 1866 have been transmitted 19,700,000, instead of 6,000,000, the actual number.

From the foregoing premises and from the greater intelligence and social and commercial activity of the British people, as well as the greater advantages which the longer distances give to the telegraph over the mail, Mr. Scudamore argued that the establishment of a postal telegraph in Great Britain was desirable and that it would become even a greater success than on the continent. In conformity with his opinions a bill was prepared by the post-office department and submitted to the lords of the treasury February 14, 1868. In transmitting the bill the Earl of Montrose, the postmaster-general, said:

> It is merely a permissive bill, and does not contemplate the acquisition of any monopoly by the postmaster-general. * * * It is not proposed in the inclosed bill to confer on the postmaster-general any rights which the existing companies have not been authorized to exercise, or to give him any greater power over the holders of private property than the existing companies have already obtained from Parliament. In short, if the bill should become a law it would merely place the postmaster-general in the position of a newly-organized telegraph company, and will leave him to negotiate with existing companies for the transfer of their property on such terms as shall be satisfactory to him and them.

Upon its introduction into Parliament the bill was at once attacked by the representatives of the telegraph companies. Their arguments need not here be adverted to. They have been so often urged from the same quarters in this country that they are already familiar to the Senate and to the American people. After an exhaustive hearing by a parliamentary committee they were decided not to be well founded, and in July, 1868, an act was passed "to enable her majesty's postmaster-general to acquire, work, and maintain electric telegraphs." Its main features were as follows: The Postmaster-General was authorized, two-thirds of the stockholders consenting, to purchase the whole or any part of the undertakings of the telegraph companies at a price equal to twenty times their net profit during the year ending June 30, 1868. In addition to this price, special arrangements were provided for the compensation of the competing United Kingdom Company in consideration of its efforts to establish a shilling rate before alluded to, and for the assumption of the lines owned by the railway and canal companies, or operated by them, under contracts with the railways.

The rate for messages was fixed throughout the kingdom at 1 shilling for twenty words, excluding the address and signature. This rate covered delivery within one mile of the office of address or within its postal delivery. If delivered beyond these limits the post-office might be used or special messengers employed at a cost of sixpence per double mile. No agreement entered into under authority of this act was to bind the government until it had lain for one month on the table of both houses of Parliament without disapproval.

It is not easy to say whether the fixing of these favorable terms of purchase was due to deception practiced by the companies as to their actual profits or to concessions made by the friends of the bill in order to avert the opposition of the companies, but it is certain that before its passage that opposition was withdrawn, and for the best of reasons.

Referring to the matter, Mr. Gladstone said (Hansard, volume 193, page 1586):

That at all events, at that time (before they knew of the proposed terms) the companies treated the proposed purchase as a disadvantage. The price of the Electric Telegraph Company's shares was then £153; on the 23d of June, just after the reference in committee, the shares had risen to £165. The rise might be taken to represent the normal, fair, and legitimate improvement in the value of the property, connected with the approximate realization of the plans of the government. But what were they to say when, instead of a rise of £12 between the 2d of January and the 23d of June, they found a rise of £41 between the 23d of June and the 21st of July? And would the reasoning of the honorable and learned gentleman account for that? He had set up an ingenious theory that there was something so delightfully scientific in the possession of telegraph property that it attracted to itself, quite irrespective of vulgar calculation, what was known as a pretium affectionis, but he was afraid that the change which had occurred during the last few weeks must be attributed to considerations of a different character. The Electric Telegraph Company's shares were £153 on the 2d of January, £165 on the 23d of June, and £206 on the 1st of July; and the Magnetic Company's shares were £115 on the 2d of January, £125 on the 23d of June, and £150 on the 21st of July. In the former case the increase was one-fourth, and in the latter it was one-fifth, between June and July.

Under the agreements made with the telegraph companies by the authority of the indefinite provisions of the act of 1868 the compensation to be paid the companies grew from £3,000,000, the estimate of Mr. Scudamore, to over £7,000,000. When the money bill came to be discussed by the new Parliament, Mr. Crawford, a member of the commons, who had opposed the original bill, said (Hansard, volume 198, page 759):

He confessed the terms now proposed to be given to the companies were, in his opinion, exorbitant and preposterous beyond all reason. Still he thought the house was bound by its bargain. The Parliament undertook last year to pay these companies twenty years' purchase, and if it could be shown that the profits amounted to the sum set down, the house could not help itself without breaking faith with the companies. He thought the bargain a very bad one, but he was afraid it must be carried out.

It was this sentiment that led Parliament to change the original intention and to confer a monopoly of the telegraphs on the post-office department. Thus one mistake necessarily led to another, and the British postal telegraph was from the first handicapped by an enormous interest charge, and to some extent by the odium which always attaches to a legal monopoly.

But, notwithstanding the exorbitant price paid for the telegraph, the investment has not proved an unprofitable one. Since the date of the transfer of the telegraph to the state, January 29, 1870, the length of line has been increased from 5,651 miles to 27,096 miles, and that wire from 48,999 miles to 132,431 miles.

The number of offices has grown from 2,488 to 5,747, and the number of messages from about 6,000,000 to nearly 33,000,000. Much of this increase was very sudden, the number of messages in 1872 having jumped to about 17,000,000. The popular appreciation of the benefit derived from the transfer of the telegraph to the state was so marked that for a short time the lines, notwithstanding their great extension, were clogged with business. This difficulty was soon obviated, however, and the steady progress of the system has enabled the government to pay all the expenses out of the receipts and to fall but little short of paying the interest on the entire investment.

For the whole of Europe it appears that the total number of internal messages sent in 1882 (excluding Portugal, Spain, Turkey, and Bulgaria), namely, 90,053,781, were sent at a total cost of $24,278,164, or an average cost per message of less than 27 cents. When it is considered that these figures represent more than the average tariff for the minimum number of words, and that the statistics include such unprogressive countries as Russia, Servia, Roumania, and Greece, where rates are exceptionally high, it will be seen that the average rate, taking Europe as a whole, is extremely low.

The interest which European governments take in their telegraphic systems is shown by the fact that they have been accustomed for many years to hold conferences, at which all matters relating to telegraphy are discussed. They have also organized an international bureau, with headquarters at Berne, presided over by a director-general, Mr. L. Curchod, a gentleman selected for his abilities for that important office, to whom advocates of a governmental telegraph in the United States are much indebted for statistical and other information.

In the United States, after the relinquishment by the General Government of the control of the line from Washington to Baltimore, the construction of a telegraph was commenced by individuals and corporations organized under State laws. The most enterprising of these was the Western Union Company, organized at Rochester, N. Y., which first built a line from New York to Louisville, via Buffalo, Cleveland, and Cincinnati, at a cost of about $150,000. The company then turned its attention to the purchase of lines of struggling Western companies, acquiring the Erie and Michigan from Buffalo to Milwaukee, and the Wade line from Cleveland to Cincinnati, and leasing the Louisville, Saint Louis and Pittsburgh, and the Cincinnati and Louisville lines. It also built from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia. The lines were cheaply built and still more cheaply purchased, so that the expenditure, as is stated by those in position to know, was up to this time about $300,000. This expenditure was more than recouped by the cash dividends, and the company's stock was quadrupled, making it about $2,000,000. From that time forward it is believed that the investments were paid out of the earnings, after deducting handsome dividends. These investments were sometimes in cash, but more generally in the shape of new issues of stock, and the policy of absorption of old and the construction of new lines was continued.

Down to 1860 the intervention of the General Government had been confined to the passage of a few acts granting aid and protection to parties proposing to extend the telegraph to the Pacific coast and to the Atlantic Cable Company. In June of that year Congress offered a bonus of $40,000 a year for ten years, in addition to rights on the public lands, to parties who would undertake the construction of a line from the Missouri to the Pacific. This offer was accepted by certain directors of the Western Union Company, and the line constructed from Brownsville, Nebr., a distance of 1,100 miles, to Salt Lake City, where it connected with the line to San Francisco. Four hundred and seventy-five miles of the eastern end of this line, from Brownsville to Sedgwick, were erected by Charles M. Stebbins, a well-known telegraph builder and operator, at that time I believe a citizen of my State, at a cost of $67 per mile, including the hauling of the poles and all the materials long distances in wagons.

The western end, according to Mr. Stebbins' statement, was built much more expensively, at a large profit to the contractors, but the whole cost only $147,000, or about $134 per mile.

On this expenditure $1,000,000 of stock was issued in the name of the Pacific Telegraph Company. In speaking of this line Mr. Stebbins, in a sworn statement, dated March 26, 1870, said:

This one million dollars of Pacific telegraph stock (prominent men of the Western Union Telegraph Company being the sole owners) was afterward taken into the Western Union Telegraph Company by issuing therefor $2,000,000 of Western Union Telegraph Company stock. After this the Western Union Telegraph Company's stock was trebled, by which manipulation an original expenditure of $147,000 (and a part of that not honestly spent) came to represent $6,000,000 of Western Union Telegraph stock.

The property thus represented by $6,000,000 of stock had itself been three times paid for by the Government bonus of $40,000 per annum for ten years.

At the beginning of the civil war the telegraphic territory of the country was divided mainly between the American Company, running through the eastern slope from Nova Scotia to New Orleans; the Southwestern, extending from New Orleans through Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky to Louisville; and the Western Union Company, extending through the Middle and Western States. The California State Telegraph Company operated the lines on the Pacific slope, connected with the Western Union by the line above alluded to; the Illinois and Mississippi Company operated lines west of Chicago; the Northwestern Company those through Wisconsin and Minnesota, which maintained an independent organization until their recent absorption. These lines all worked in connection as one system, although under different managements.

In 1863, as is stated by eminent authority (Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard), the capital stock of the Western Union Company was $3,000,000, representing the $2,000,000 to which it had been quadrupled and accretions from various sources. In that year a stock dividend of $3,000,000 was added. In 1863 and 1864 $5,000,000 more was issued to represent extensions and new lines, and in the latter year the stock was doubled by an issue of $11,000,000 as a dividend. In 1863 and 1864 the Russian extension was organized, with a capital of $10,000,000. The success of the Atlantic cable of 1865 made this line utterly useless, and it was saddled on the Western Union Company by an issue of $3,300,000 in bonds of the latter.

During and after the war an active opposition arose from the United States Telegraph Company, competing in the territory of the Western Union over some 14,000 miles of wire.

In 1866 commenced a grand scheme of consolidation. The 14,000 miles of the United States Company's wires, which were very poorly built and which offered few additional facilities to the public, were stocked into the Western Union at $6,345,800. The Illinois and Mississippi and the Southwestern Companies' lines were absorbed. Bonds to the amount of $1,652,000 were issued for the California telegraph lines, and for each share of the American Company's stock, which amounted to $4,000,000, three shares were issued, making an addition of $12,000,000.

When this consolidation was accomplished the Western Union Company stood without an important rival in the telegraph business of the country, with a capital stock of $41,000,000 and a total nominal investment of $47,877,350, of which $22,475,000 represented nothing but pure water, and $9,645,000 property almost worthless. The remaining the inventor as a public benefactor, covered him with honors, and from the beginning they assumed the erection and management of the telegraph lines. It may be said that in taking control of the telegraphs the monarchical governments of the Old World were actuated as much by the desire to use them for the maintenance of authority as by the advantages which they offered for the service of the people. To a certain extent this is doubtless true, but it is none the less true that the people have reaped the most solid benefits, and that the tendency has been rather to liberalize government than to maintain arbitrary power. From the various administrative departments to which it was at different times confided the management of the telegraphs in the most important states has been transferred to the post-office and amalgamated with that establishment, and by successive reduction of rates the system has been brought within the reach of the poorest classes, and at the same time, through the increase of correspondence thus produced, it has, in the majority of cases, been made self-sustaining.

Moreover, the greatest progress and the best management have alike been shown in those countries where the forms of government are most liberal, as in Switzerland and Belgium. The area of these countries is so small (the former covering only about 16,000 square miles and the latter only about 11,330 square miles), that the telegraph has the least possible advantage over mail communication. A few hours will carry a letter from one end of either country to the other, but the management of the telegraphs has been such that their small margin of usefulness has been availed of to the utmost. Under the tariff of one franc, or less than twenty cents for twenty words, the number of internal messages in Belgium grew from 80,216 in 1860 to 332,721 in 1865. On the 1st of December of that year the rate was reduced one-half, and in 1866 the number of messages increased to 692,936, or more than 100 per cent. In 1882 the number was 2,225,094, in addition to 579,931 international messages sent and 620,923 international messages received, and 3,095,177 messages in the service of telegraph, post-office, railroad, navy, and other government departments. In Switzerland, under a like tariff of one franc for twenty words, the number of internal messages had in 1867 reached 397,333. The rate was reduced to half a franc on the 1st of January, 1868. In the very first year of the reduction the number of messages increased to 798,186, or more than 100 per cent.; and since that time it has grown to 1,837,385 in 1881, in addition to 879,727 international messages sent and received.

These figures alone would seem to be sufficient to show the popular character of European systems as illustrated in these two countries; but that character further appears from the classifications made by Belgian and Swiss administrations of the nature of the telegrams in 1872 and prior years, from which it appears that more than half the telegrams in those countries were on social affairs. In 1872 the proportion of social messages in Belgium was over 55 per cent., and in Switzerland 61 per cent. of the total number. In striking contrast with this is the statement which has been made on good authority, that of the 40,000,000 messages which passed over the wires in this country last year less than 12 per cent. were on social matters.

In the other countries on the continent the progress of the telegraph has varied with the character of the people and their institutions, the rates charged, and the advantages offered by telegraphing over postal communication.

In France, under the tariff of 1858 of 2 francs fixed and 10 centimes per myriameter (about 6 miles) for twenty words, 1 franc in the same department, and 1½ francs between adjacent departments, the number of messages in 1861 was only 734,352. January 1, 1862, the rates were reduced to 2 francs per twenty words, without regard to distance, and 1 franc in the same department. The number of messages rose to 1,291,774 in 1862. In 1868 the rates were reduced to 1 franc throughout France and one-half franc within a department; and the number of messages increased from 2,916,734 in that year to 4,085,408 in 1869.

Since the establishment of the republic the progress has been most rapid. In 1878 the service was amalgmated with that of the post-office, and in 1880 the tariff was reduced to 5 centimes, or less than one-half cent per word, with a minimum tariff of 50 centimes. The result of this reduction appears in the increase of internal messages from 13,998,736 in 1879 to 21,210,510 in 1882. In the last-named year the French sent and received also 3,379,620 international messages. For 1 franc messages may now be sent from the north of France to Algiers, a distance of 2,000 miles.

In Germany the tariff was for a long time based upon distance. Under this rate the number of internal messages in 1872 was 6,783,533 and the receipts from internal messages were $1,304,373, showing an average receipt per message (which of course exceeds the average tariff for the minimum number of words) of about 20 cents. In 1875 the service was amalgamated with the post-office so completely that no distinction is now made in the statistics as to the salaries paid employés who perform the postal and telegraphic services.

In 1878 Bavaria and Würtemberg, which formerly maintained separate telegraphic administrations, were brought into the imperial system. The present tariff in Germany is 1½ cents per word, with a fixed rate of 5 cents per message additional. For local messages the tariff is one-half cent per word. The number of internal messages in 1882 was 12,303,516.

While the progress of telegraphic correspondence in Germany is thus seen to have been less rapid, so far as the reduction in rates and increase of messages are concerned, the management of the system in other respects leaves little to be desired; and further reduction may be expected to place the system on the same popular basis as in the other countries. In 1876 an extensive system of under-ground lines was commenced, which now extends to 221 cities and aggregates 3,400 miles of line, carrying 23,318 miles of conducting wires.

In Great Britain the telegraph was at first controlled by private parties. As early as 1854, however, it was proposed by Mr. Thomas Allen, a well-known electrician, to annex the system to the general post-office. In 1856 Mr. Baines, an officer of the post-office department, submitted a plan for that purpose to the lords of the treasury. In 1861, Mr. Ricardo, formely a member of Parliament, forwarded to the chancellor of the exchequer a memorandum "in support of the expediency of the telegraphic communication of the kingdom being placed in the hands of Her Majesty's Government," which was referred to the post-office officials, but did not receive immediate attention. The question, however, soon grew to be one of popular interest, and in 1865 the Edinburgh chamber of commerce appointed a committee to consider it, which reported in favor of the proposition. This was followed by a petition from the association of chambers of commerce of the United Kingdom to both houses of Parliament. The post-office department, through Mr. Scudamore, one of its officials, then commenced a thorough investigation of the subject. In this investigation it was ascertained that many important districts were unprovided with telegraphic facilities, and that the rates, although apparently yielding only a fair profit to the companies, were unreasonably high. Competition had been tried by a company made up of stockholders directly interested in cheap telegraphy which had established a uniform rate of 1 shilling, but it was unable to maintain this rate, although the old companies still prospered on the tariff between points not affected by the competition. In July, 1865, the rates had been increased to one shilling and sixpence between 100 and 200 miles and 2 shillings beyond 200 miles.

In Mr. Scudamore's report the success of the postal telegraph of Belgium and Switzerland was adverted to, as well as that of the system of the colony of Victoria, where the telegraph had for some time been under the control of the post-office. It was shown that the proportion of telegrams to letters in the United Kingdom had ranged from 1 to 439 in 1855 to 1 to 121 in 1866, while in Switzerland the proportion had been 1 to 84 in 1860 and 1 to 69 in 1866.

In Belgium, after the reduction in telegraph tolls from 1 franc to one-half franc, the proportion rose from 1 to 73 in 1865 to 1 to 37 in 1866. If this proportion had obtained in the United Kingdom there would in 1866 have been transmitted 19,700,000, instead of 6,000,000, the actual number.

From the foregoing premises and from the greater intelligence and social and commercial activity of the British people, as well as the greater advantages which the longer distances give to the telegraph over the mail, Mr. Scudamore argued that the establishment of a postal telegraph in Great Britain was desirable and that it would become even a greater success than on the continent. In conformity with his opinions a bill was prepared by the post-office department and submitted to the lords of the treasury February 14, 1868. In transmitting the bill the Earl of Montrose, the postmaster-general, said:

> It is merely a permissive bill, and does not contemplate the acquisition of any monopoly by the postmaster-general. * * * It is not proposed in the inclosed bill to confer on the postmaster-general any rights which the existing companies have not been authorized to exercise, or to give him any greater power over the holders of private property than the existing companies have already obtained from Parliament. In short, if the bill should become a law it would merely place the postmaster-general in the position of a newly-organized telegraph company, and will leave him to negotiate with existing companies for the transfer of their property on such terms as shall be satisfactory to him and them.

Upon its introduction into Parliament the bill was at once attacked by the representatives of the telegraph companies. Their arguments need not here be adverted to. They have been so often urged from the same quarters in this country that they are already familiar to the Senate and to the American people. After an exhaustive hearing by a parliamentary committee they were decided not to be well founded, and in July, 1868, an act was passed "to enable her majesty's postmaster-general to acquire, work, and maintain electric telegraphs." Its main features were as follows: The Postmaster-General was authorized, two-thirds of the stockholders consenting, to purchase the whole or any part of the undertakings of the telegraph companies at a price equal to twenty times their net profit during the year ending June 30, 1868. In addition to this price, special arrangements were provided for the compensation of the competing United Kingdom Company in consideration of its efforts to establish a shilling rate before alluded to, and for the assumption of the lines owned by the railway and canal companies, or operated by them, under contracts with the railways.

The rate for messages was fixed throughout the kingdom at 1 shilling for twenty words, excluding the address and signature. This rate covered delivery within one mile of the office of address or within its

I do not need to assume the responsibility of charging the present existence of all the abuses which are possible, or even of those referred to, in the management of the telegraph. It will be sufficient for us to say, in the words of the late Postmaster-General Howe:

Knowing that it can be so abused, it seems to be the dictate of prudence not to wait until it is so abused. It is an agency much too dreadful to be intrusted to private hands.

For evils like those that have been briefly indicated it is conceded by all who have investigated this subject impartially, even by those who like the late Postmaster-General came to the investigation reluctantly and with a strong indisposition to interfere with private interests, that the remedy must come in some form of action by the National Government. Competition might afford relief, but it is certain that competition will not do so, because competition is at the expense of capital. This I believe to be the overwhelming sentiment of the country, accentuated by the occurrences of last summer, and it remains for us to decide sooner or later upon the form of relief best adapted to the nature of the case.

Four leading plans to this end have been proposed to Congress, differing widely in their provisions. I will endeavor to describe them briefly without regard to the order of time in which they were submitted. While I would not antagonize any one of them that would meet with the approval of the Senate, certain objections to each, which have occurred to me in investigating the subject, have induced me to suggest a fifth, and still a different plan.

First, it has been proposed to charter a new company to build or purchase telegraph lines, with which the Government should contract for the transmission of telegrams at specified rates, the Government to attend to their receipt from and delivery to the public; the wires of the company being admitted to the post-offices in most cases, and its operators in many places acting as postmasters or postal clerks. This plan has met with some favor in the House, and was strongly indorsed by Senator Ramsey, of Minnesota, chairman of the Post-Office Committee. It is considered by the present Executive and the Postmaster-General the least objectionable of all the schemes yet proposed; but, with great deference to these authorities, it seems to me open to serious criticism.

The establishment of a postal telegraph can only be justified on the ground that it is a public business, under the post-office clause of the Constitution; the power to regulate commerce between the States, even if applicable, not being broad enough to authorize an effective intervention. From the interference of the Government, so far as it extends, no one should be allowed to derive a direct private profit; least of all should Congress, by chartering a particular company, favor one private interest to the exclusion of another.

The administrative objections to the scheme are well stated by one of our ablest Postmasters-General, Mr. Creswell, who gave the subject of postal telegraph exhaustive attention in his annual report of 1872.

It is not—

Said he—

in analogy with the workings of the mail service in any important particular. In the latter the Department transmits the mails under the charge of its own officers, and controls all the machinery necessary for that purpose; in the former it is proposed to make the Department a mere agent to receive and deliver telegraph messages for the benefit and profit of a private corporation.

After describing the duties of the company and the Post-Office under the proposed dual management, Mr. Creswell adds:

The Government, inasmuch as it would deal directly with the parties sending and receiving messages, would be alone looked to for redress in case of default, and yet it would have no adequate power to compel the company to execute its contract. This would lead to endless confusion and irreconcilable conflicts between the Government and the company, and would certainly result in great inconvenience and pecuniary disaster to the people.

The bill of General Butler, reported in 1875 from the House Judiciary Committee, proposed to declare all telegraph lines to be post-roads, and to require the Postmaster-General to contract for the transmission of messages in the same way that he contracts with railroads for the transportation of the mails. While this plan is not open to the charge of favoritism, it is difficult to see how it could escape the administrative difficulties before suggested.

A third plan contemplates the construction of lines by the Government without making any provision for the use of existing facilities. In 1868 Mr. Elihu B. Washburne, and in the last Congress Mr. Anderson, introduced bills looking to such construction over certain specified routes only between the larger cities. It may well be doubted whether such partial systems would give sufficient relief or whether their operation would be such as to encourage Congress to afterward authorize the necessary extension. In the telegraph as in railroad business, the traffic on the trunk lines is not more necessary, important, or profitable than the local traffic, or that on the branch lines, which act as feeders. Moreover it would be a serious inconvenience to the patrons of the telegraph to divide their messages, sending those to the larger cities by the postal lines and those to smaller points by the lines of the company. The latter could doubtless afford without much loss to reduce its rates to competing points to a level with those of the Government and through its superior connections it could retain the bulk of the telegraphic business. The loss which such a system would entail on the Government would be a constant argument in favor of its abandonment instead of its extension by further legislation.

If the present is a favorable time for Congress to determine whether it shall perform what I regard as its constitutional duty, to establish telegraph post-roads, then the establishment should be made co-extensive with the needs of the people, and the governmental system should not be outstripped in extent by that of private parties.

If the principle is once decided upon, the same Congress which decides it should authorize it to be carried out in its entirety, and not have a system half established, and perhaps a financial failure, exposed to attacks from those influences which would surround our legislation when it was proposed to extend it hereafter.

Furthermore, as an objection to a proposition of this character, I submit that if the existing lines could be acquired for anything near what it would cost the Government to build, sound policy requires that they should be purchased. I concede that on the principles analogous to those laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of the Charles River Bridge Company the Government is under no obligation to purchase existing lines; but that company was given the option of selling its property at a fair valuation, and it would seem to be expedient to give the telegraph companies the same option before proceeding to construct lines in competition with them. This would do only in case they refused to sell.

The fourth plan to which I have alluded was that proposed by Mr. C. C. Washburn in the House of Representatives in 1870 and afterward indorsed by Postmaster-General Creswell, to wit, the enforcement of the existing contract with the companies who accepted the provisions of the act of 1866 by the purchase of their "telegraph lines, property, and effects" at an appraised value. This plan was the subject of two bills in the last House. One, introduced by Mr. SPRINGER, would authorize the appointment of the appraisers provided for in the act of 1866, and direct them "to ascertain the actual cash value of all the plant, property, and effects of the companies interested, including the value and character of all leases, choses in action, contracts, and franchises, and the receipts of the company from all sources; the operating expenses and the rates charged for transmitting messages, royalty paid to inventors, and all other facts which such appraisers may deem necessary for a thorough knowledge of the subject." This information was to be reported to Congress at its next session for its action or non-action, as the case might be.

The other bill, that of Mr. Ford, is the same as the bill reported by Mr. C. C. Washburn from the Select Committee on Postal Telegraphy in the Forty-first Congress. It would authorize the appointment of appraisers under the act of 1866, and give the Postmaster-General power to contract with the companies for the purchase of their lines, &c., at the appraised value, but subject to the approval of Congress. A basis of appraisal is, however, laid down for the appraisers, as follows: First, what would be the actual cost to the Government of erecting new lines of equal value of those appraised; second, the value of said lines as a means of earning dividends, regarding a stock which will earn regularly 10 per centum on all proper expenditures equivalent to par; and the average of the above modes of appraisement shall be the true basis of value.

While this mode of appraisal might not have been too liberal at the date of Mr. Washburn's report, when the market value of Western Union property, at the selling price of the stock, was about $16,000,000, it would not answer for the present, when that value is over $60,000,000. Moreover, it is contended, first, that the act of 1866 did not give either party the right to fix the basis of appraisal; and, second, that the companies were not bound to submit to an appraisal until the Government had first provided absolutely for the purchase of their lines at the value to be determined by the appraisers.

I have little doubt of the meaning of the act of 1866. It was intended, in the first place, to give the companies five years' notice in which to prepare for the entry of the Government into the telegraph business; and, in the second place (in return for that notice and for the very valuable franchises conferred upon the companies which should voluntarily accept its provisions), to provide a means whereby the Government might acquire the facilities necessary for the conduct of such business without the trouble of building or manufacturing them. Under the act "the telegraph lines, property, and effects" of the companies were to be bought under appraisal, i. e., such property and effects as are necessary and convenient for the proper working of telegraph lines, without regard to the value of the stock or the price of good-will or monopoly. The forbearance of the Government in not exercising for five years its undoubted right to undertake the telegraphic business and the privileges granted to the companies constituted a valuable consideration for the stipulation on their part to sell their "telegraph lines, property, and effects." The contract was one of perfect mutuality and justice to the different companies, as well to the Western Union, whose property was paying large dividends, as to the opposition lines, which were losing money; and if the Government before making it was perfectly at liberty to undertake the business without regard to the existence of the companies, then surely our forbearance and concession to the latter, which have aided the Western Union since 1866 to amass a profit of $65,000,000, were not intended to place us in a worse position than before the passage of the act.

But these views are stoutly disputed by the Western Union Company, which has many times in the course of the discussion of this question claimed that the appraisal of its lines must be based on "their capacity to earn money;" or, in other words, the profits which its practical monopoly, built up largely since the act of 1866 was passed, has enabled that company to reap.

On this point the act itself is silent. I do not see how its provisions could be brought before the courts for construction until after the appraisers had acted, and perhaps committed us to the views of the companies and to an expenditure which would perpetuate by taxation on the whole people dividends which are now paid by the senders of telegrams.

The act of 1866, if we should now attempt to enforce its provisions, would involve us in serious difficulties, and leave us in no better position than that in which Great Britain was placed in the absence of a prior statute on the subject.

If we go to an appraisement we are bound irretrievably to abide the award of five appraisers, of whom two are to be named by the Government, two by the companies, and the fifth to be agreed upon by the other four. We know in advance that the two appraisers selected by the companies will insist upon the most exorbitant award which the companies, in their greed, can possibly demand, and that they will have at least an equal chance to secure the fifth appraiser in their interest. In fact, they can refuse their assent to any fifth appraiser who does not suit them, and thus either defeat the Government by preventing any appraisement at all, or obtain such fifth appraiser as they feel confident of their power to manipulate. The Government almost invariably goes to the wall in appraisements of this kind, and especially where the other side has an unlimited command of money. Appraisers appointed by the Government, who neither will have nor ought to have any other purpose than to do impartial justice between the parties, will be no match for the appraisers appointed by the companies, whose object is sure to be not impartial justice between the parties, but the highest obtainable award in favor of their employers and clients.

In making these observations I am not assuming that the managers of telegraphic companies are either worse or better than other men. The Government is rich and able to pay round prices for all it buys. Upon the average and common views of morality which prevail, nobody loses character nor suffers much from conscientious scruples by driving a sharp bargain with the Government about anything. The cases are exceptional in which men do not obtain and retain all they can get from it.

But we are not bound to put the provisions of the act of 1866 in operation in order to acquire a system of postal telegraphs. No such agreement is to be implied, either from the concessions made by the act or from the forbearance of nearly eighteen years to take advantage of our rights under it. We are still at liberty to compete with the telegraph company as we do with the banks and express companies in our money-order and parcel-post business; and unless the telegraph owners shall agree to sell at a fair price, or to come under appraisal on a reasonable basis, I am in favor of such a competition. The bill which I have had the honor to introduce provides for this contingency, by allowing the purchase of the existing lines, if they are offered, at a certain percentage (which I have left blank) over the cost of new construction. In its other details, the discussion of which at length I shall postpone until the committee shall have had an opportunity to consider it, I have endeavored to meet the objections which have seemed to me to apply to the other plans heretofore presented, and to incorporate in it the most approved features of European systems, leaving matters of administration largely to the Postmaster-General, subject to Congressional disapproval.

The bill fixes a popular uniform rate of 1 cent per word for all distances, with reductions for the press, and provides for the transmission of telegrams by mail between postal telegraph offices and all post-offices where telegraph offices are not established under its provisions. Postal telegraph offices are to be opened at all places where telegraph offices now exist by July 1, 1887.

The telegraphic service of the country ought not to be performed upon the methods of private business operations, the governing principle of which is necessarily that of obtaining the greatest profit and charging the highest rate which the business will bear. The people are entitled to telegraphic communications upon the methods of an enlightened public service, not looking at all to pecuniary gains, and not even insisting as a necessary condition that the cost shall at all times be directly reimbursed in money, but having regard to the indirect benefits of stimulating trade, diffusing intelligence, and strengthening social and family ties. The postal service by the telegraph ought, in short, to be governed by the same policy which we have so long and with such manifest and admitted advantage applied to the postal service in transmitting letters and newspapers.

Upon considerations of public policy, and because we believed it to be for the common advantage of the people, we have long since, without regard to the relative cost of transmitting letters over long and short distances, adopted a uniform rate of postage for the entire country.

The reasons are stronger in the case of the telegraph than of the mail for the adoption of a uniform rate.

The telegraph has already so largely taken the place of the mail, and will in the future, under the benignant and fostering administration of the Government, supersede the mail to such a degree that the people of the remote and thinly settled districts are entitled to be placed upon the same footing in respect to this mode of communication as the people of our densely populated cities.

No time can be more auspicious than the present to encounter the expenditures of the new policy, including the cost of the lines and other plant of a Government telegraph. Our revenues are so abundant, that in order to reduce them, and for the mere sake of reducing them, propositions are made to repeal the taxes on articles such as whisky and tobacco, taxes which oppress nobody, and on articles which are admitted on all hands to be the most fitting objects of taxation. Under a condition of things which gives rise to suggestions which receive no inconsiderable support, to throw away money by the repeal of such taxes for the sake of throwing it away, it will not be denied that now is the accepted time to meet the first cost of a Government telegraph service, if it is ever to be undertaken.

I am aware that the passage of such a bill would increase by several thousands the number of Government officers and employés, and that this is an objection which has been raised by opponents of a Government-telegraph system; but the same objection would prevent the extension of the postal service, which is growing with enormous rapidity and benefit to the country. If the telegraph is properly, as I claim it is, only a branch of the postal system, which the Constitution authorizes Congress to provide, we should not be alarmed at the number of employés which it requires. To quote once more from the late Postmaster-General Howe:

> I know of no law but necessity limiting the employment of officials. That government is not wise which employs a single officer not needed; it is unwise if it refuse to employ thousands when they are needed.

Again, he says that—

> The increase has doubtless been exaggerated. At a very large percentage of the offices the telegraph operator would not supplement the postmaster, but would supplant him, and that would result in giving to the administration of not a few offices men who have learned to do one thing in place of those who have never learned to do anything.

To this extent at least the adoption of a postal telegraph would reduce political patronage and be a movement in the direction of civil-service reform, and I am assured it would also to some extent reform the personnel of the telegraph. By amalgamating the two establishments better salaries could be paid without an increase of the present expenditure. The best educated operators would then be content to serve at the smaller offices, instead of crowding into the cities, striking for higher wages, and seeking other occupations where their efforts to better themselves in their own have failed.

The foregoing considerations negative the idea that the telegraph would be used as a political machine by the party in power. The system would require the service of the whole body of telegraphers in the country. Its officers and employés would necessarily be appointed for their technical skill, without regard to their political affiliations. The ward striker and the more genteel campaign organizer would thus both be excluded from its service. A system in the hands of men of all parties, appointed for their efficiency, could not be used largely for the benefit of any party. In my judgment, founded upon some experience, there is much more political interference by the present telegraph employés than there would be under a postal system regulated by law. But if this were not so, it seems that the public would suffer less from the active efforts of a few more place-holders to elect this or that man to office than it is likely to suffer from the control of its communications by monopolists seeking their own profit and aggrandizement.

It is doubtless of great importance who shall direct, make, and execute our laws, but it is of much greater importance that the system of telegraphic intercourse should not be left to grow under private control into one of those strong yet subtle forces which are constantly operating in this country to transfer the production of the many to the pockets of the few and to reduce the reward of labor, and make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

Whatever abuses there may be in the post-office, no one would propose to surrender our postal communication wholly to a corporate monopoly; yet if we fail to assume the telegraph, we may sooner or later find that we have substantially done so.

The use of the telegraph is now restricted by its cost to extraordinary communications, and by its nature to messages which do not need to be in the handwriting of the sender. Under these conditions the proportion of telegrams to letters is about one to thirty. But who shall say how soon some great discovery no more wonderful than the telephone may enable fac-simile messages to be sent instantaneously and cheaply over the wires instead of by the slow and costly process by which they are now transmitted in Europe. If that result shall be accomplished (and it is being earnestly sought by inventors), the post-office will be stripped of its most important business. Every letter which does not require absolute secrecy or which can be written in cipher will be taken from the mails and sent by electricity. Drafts will be drawn and balances settled daily by telegraph, and the monopoly which shall have grown up in the control of this business will overshadow not only the Post-Office Department but the Government itself.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN SETTLERS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 10th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 for the settlement, under existing treaties, of certain freedmen and their descendants upon lands known as the Oklahoma district, within the Indian Territory.

The matter is presented for the consideration of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

BOUNDARY LINES OF INDIAN LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 11th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, an item of appropriation in the sum of $3,000 for the location and survey of boundary lines of certain lands purchased by the United States from the Creek Indians for the use of the Seminole Indians in the Indian Territory.

The matter is presented for the consideration of the Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 14, 1884.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will now be laid before the Senate, being the report of the Committee on Rules relative to the joint rules.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 55 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 14, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D.D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Postmaster of the House of Representatives be authorized to employ four more assistants.

HOT SPRINGS CREEK, ARKANSAS.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to transmit to the House a copy of the original contract and all subsequent modifications thereof, if any, and any other papers on file in his office, touching the work of improving the Hot Springs Creek, in the town of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, together with the amount expended thereupon, the balance, if any, of the appropriation for that purpose remaining unexpended, the condition of the work, and any suggestions touching the completion thereof which he may deem proper to make.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask that the resolution be read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be read and appear in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 8, 1884.

Whereas the subject of the existence in the United States of the contagious disease of cattle known as the lung plague, or contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and the necessity and practicability of its being suppressed, has during several recent sessions of Congress been presented for the consideration of both Houses without any effective action being taken, although earnest appeals have been made, not only by individual members but by legislative bodies, by agricultural associations, and by representatives of the dairy and grazing interests in many of the States; and

Whereas it has been conclusively shown by the report of the commissioners appointed under the authority of Congress to consider the matter, and known as the Treasury Cattle Commission, that the disease in question is entirely of foreign origin, that its existence in any country threatens the supply of beef and of milk to the inhabitants, that the neglect to extirpate it in time has brought great calamity in some countries, while in others, in which proper and timely measures have been taken, it has been wholly driven out and kept out, and that, under the circumstances existing, the work can be effectually accomplished in the United States only by means of an organization unlimited by State lines and such as Congress alone can authorize and establish, which shall exist for the purpose of harmonizing and unifying the action of the several States involved, and shall for that purpose be furnished with funds from the national Treasury, to be expended for an object which is national in its character and importance: Therefore,

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Senators of this State in Congress be requested and the Representatives of this State be requested to use their best efforts to secure the enactment of a law to carry into effect the recommendations made by the Treasury Cattle Commission in its report transmitted to Congress in February, 1882, for the extinction of the lung plague, and to provide means therefor, or to secure such other legislation as may speedily and effectually accomplish the result.
